SPECIAL BLACK HISTORY FOCUS

THE BALLARD FAMILY

Black History Beacons of Light 2016

Black History Month is an official time set aside to look at the contributions of African Americans in the United States. Yet, Black History is being made everyday, by each of us. How exciting then to examine the lives of ancestors. How refreshing to learn the history and contributions of history makers of today.

Milwaukee is rich with families whose lives impact the Black community, daily. To witness their lives, their accomplishments, and how they continue to give, inspire and challenge youth today, is indeed Black History.

Let us travel to the old South, to understand the "beauty of families", strong neighborhoods, good educations and the other extraordinary gifts many current Milwaukeeans brought to our city.

While we focus on one family, they typify many who have built Milwaukee's Black community, over the years.Their strengths continue to bear fruit today in our schools, neighborhoods, our churches and social circles.

Envision Montgomery, Alabama, in 1890. Montgomery was typical of many Southern cities. Blacks lived in certain parts of the city, Whites had their sections, as well. Schools were segregated, as were all public facilities, restaurants, theaters and banks.

While most Blacks of that era, resided in rural, country settings, many lived in the city, as did the Ballard family. David and Lura Ballard were representative of young families who lived, loved and educated their children before the Civil Rights movement.

The beloved parents of seven children, among them the late Ruby Ballard Young, an educator; and Cherrye Janet Ballard Trotman, an educator and civic leader and grandparents to Dr. Enid Trotman Anyanwu, Family Medicine physician to many today. The Ballard's are Black History Beacons for 2016. We salute them, all.

David Ballard graduated from Tuskegee Institute in 1898, as a carpenter. Tuskegee was the brain-center of Dr. George Washington Carver, iconic inventor, who made paint, shoe polish and over 1,000 products from the peanut, and guided the technical education of thousands of African American men. Dr. Carver believed highly trained skills were the long-range employment panacea for Black lives of the future.

David Wesley Ballard was a letter carrier. As a carrier, he took mail, news and supplies purchased from the downtown stores to customers. He is the "root" or base of the Ballard, Young, Trotman Family tree: "Black History Beacons of Light."

Lura Arrington, a teacher, graduated from the Alabama State Normal School, in 1905 and guided children's lives with sound, expectant education before becoming David's wife. The two settled in the heart of Montgomery near the state capitol.

A visit to the Alabama State Capitol, today, illuminates more closely the environment in which the Ballard family grew up. Montgomery is the capitol of Alabama, the hot-bed of the state's executive and legislative houses, where the state laws were made and came down to residents.

Bordered on the west by Dexter Avenue, and the historic Dexter Avenue Memorial Baptist Church, pastoral home of young Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. of Atlanta and Ebenezer Church acclaim. And, a few blocks away was Alabama State University, a teacher-training college created to educate Black students so the University of Alabama could remain segregated. Two laboratory schools—elementary and high—were located on the campus where hundreds of young teachers were groomed for classrooms throughout the state.

Behind the Capitol was the St. Margaret's Hospital where nurses and interning doctors from Tuskegee Institute provided health services, as they finished their training.

On the other side of the capitol was a strip of retail stores and restaurants. Often frequented by townspeople, it was also an entertainment outlet for people from the country on the weekends, as they came "to town" for staples, fabrics, candies and treats.

Loveless Funeral Home was near, so memorial viewings and services were part of the Ballard family experiences. Loveless Funeral Home was owned by Lura Arrington Ballard's uncle, so the entire family was well known in and around Montgomery.

Mr. Loveless, funeral home owner, was a successful entrepreneur. Court records show he owned many houses and a fleet of hearses.

"People would follow the ambulances," Cherrye recalled. She and her brother David, Jr. had been taught to get to the accident scenes right away and if the person was Black, they encouraged the families to use the Loveless Funeral Home for arrangements.

Funeral homes, like everything else in Montgomery, were segregated. Cherrye reflected, "I never had a White teacher until I came to the University of Wisconsin. And in elementary school, the Superintendent of Schools would visit and he'd tell the class to stand and sing: "Dixie."

"Father told us all, don't you stand and sing that song, and we didn't.

"Daddy stressed education, discipline, respect and obedience; and he also insisted upon respect for yourself, our family, and our family-name. “It means something,” Cherrye remembered.

Cherrye’s surroundings included the college, the family of educators and entrepreneurs, trained professionals in the St. Margaret’s staff, small businesses, Black and White, and there were hard working people, providing services to their neighbors and the community. This mix—this balance—are directly attributable to the long-term successes the Ballard family has enjoyed.

Montgomery was vibrant and self-contained. Cherrye recalls the beautiful nurses in starched caps and military-like capes sashaying among stores, then returning to help deliver babies under the guidance of Mrs. Belle Richardson. Heretofore, Black babies were born at home. Cherrye Janet Ballard was the first of her siblings to be born in the hospital.

From her porch facing Jackson Street, Cherrye could see the patients sunning on the back porch of St. Margaret’s. While the front housed the laundry, housekeeping and kitchen, providing neighborhood employment. People were working, going to school and striving for successful lives. More were rising than falling behind and failing was not an option.

Montgomery had life and hope, despite segregation. No one liked going to the balcony, or the back of the bus, nor the back of Kress’ when Cherrye went to get lunch for Mr. Burke, the jeweler, or took the day’s take to the bank in a brown paper bag that held a fabric bag with a key on it inside. She was trusted and earned her $20 each week, saving for clothes and her future, as a young teen.

Small Black businesses, the church, social life and the sorority/fraternal life mirrored many strong family’s values as they journeyed North during the Great Migration.

Nurses, housed at Fraternal Hospital near the Ballard home, were constant professional images for Cherrye and other young women. Other women had skilled jobs like being seamstresses, dress-makers; ironing, taking care of children or cleaning homes, as did strong women like Rosa Parks, who in 1955, refused to move to the back of the bus. Ms. Parks was known for exquisite debutante gowns and Sunday dresses.

Celebrating its 50th year, this year, Rosa Parks, said “she was tired of being tired” and refused to move to the designated seats assigned to Blacks on public transportation. That refusal was the start of the famous Montgomery Bus Boycotts, that continued for a year.

The boycotts brought the city bus service to its knees as men, women and children walked to their jobs and refused to continue to pay for segregated services. The beginning of the Dr. King legacy for the elimination of the travesty of injustices, is exhibited today at the Civil Rights Museum in Montgomery. While students learn of these days in books today, many elders lived that era And, they passionately advocate to ensure that the separatist laws of the past are never revisited.

Many of us recall, with vivid clarity, the bull-horns, sirens and sit-ins, and the bellowing diatribe of Governor George Wallace: “Segregation now, segregation tomorrow, segregation forever,” despite Brown vs. the Board of Education, the Supreme Court Decision of May 17, 1954 that mandated the integration of all public schools.

“Separate but equal‘ masqueraded inferior services and books and paved the way for integration. It was a major victory of the Civil Rights Movement; however, how the states were going to follow through with the decision had not been spelled out.

So, standing at the foot of Foster Auditorium at the University of Alabama on June 11, 1963, Vivian Malone, Dave Mc Glathery and James Hood pressed pass Governor Wallace, with the help of Federal Marshals, and integrated the University of Alabama.

Selma and the march across the famous Edmund Pettus Bridge to the state capitol, in pursuant of the right to vote; and letters from Montgomery by Dr. King, are all part of Montgomery's past.

'VOTE, VOTE, VOTE," Cherrye reflected. "It matters, VOTE! "

Reminiscing about segregation, its practices and the travesty of holding people back, no doubt cast dark shadows for Ruby Ballard Young and her husband Oscar as they came to Milwaukee in 1945. Cherrye Janet Ballard followed her sister when Oscar was sent overseas with the military, so Ruby would not be in the city alone.

And the two sisters began their legacies in Milwaukee, first as teachers, then social workers, and teachers again with outstanding personal and professional lives.

Their descendants carry this rich history in their philosophical DNA throughout the country, with equally exemplary occupations, involvements in community and their heirs now permeate youthful communities with treasured occupations and associations.

Before describing the heritage of Ruby and Cherrye and their Milwaukee roots, let us back track and complete the tapestry of the David and Lura Ballard family as their seven children followed in the footsteps of their parents. Each Ballard child went to college. Each graduated and created productive lives for themselves and their families. And each leaves familial branches that bear fruit.

Ruby Ballard Young was born in Montgomery in 1913, she passed away in Milwaukee in 2014 at the age of 101 years. Ruby graduated from Alabama State at age 19 years, in 1932, with continuing degrees from Alabama State College, under three Presidents, Dr. John Williams Beverly; George Washington Trenholm and Harper Council Trenholm. She, like all of her siblings, experienced the wrath of her Mom and the punishments from Daddy Ballard when they were not serious about their grades.

"Daddy used to say; "No C' ing away your life, around here", Cherrye shared. And, the state financed Ruby's education at Columbia University in New York City when the state preferred paying for advance degrees outside of Alabama than integrating White schools.

Ruby graduated Columbia and moved to Ecorse, Michigan, becoming a principal in the Detroit Public Schools in 1945. When she came to Milwaukee, she settled at 14th and Galena.

The MPS marital embargo exempted many teachers from full-time teaching contracts, so Ruby was assigned to 4th Street School that paid $6.50 per day as a substitute teacher. She was a social worker while completing residency requirements; and after the laws changed, she, Helen Taylor and Frances Starms, also a Montgomery native, were appointed full-time and remain treasured educators of thousands of Milwaukee children.

Other Ballard siblings and their occupations included, Eunice, a graduate of Hampton University, a dietician who taught Home Economics in New Jersey. She passed at the young age of 50 years. Virginia graduated from Tennessee State University and worked with the District of Columbia Housing Department. Their brother David, Jr. worked at the State Department of Education and operated the Loveless Funeral Home for many years. Althea graduated from Tennessee State University at the age of 18 years and taught in D.C. and Detroit, earned advanced degrees from the University of Minnesota and led the Benin City Nigerian Anglican Girls Grammar School. Her daughter graduated from Carroll College, so she had brief Wisconsin associations. James was an educator in the Phoenix City, Alabama system Russell County Training School. And Cherrye, the last of the seven, continues in retirement to work with youth, after years in the Milwaukee Public School system.

The Ballard Family Tree has matriculated at Alabama State University; Tuskegee University; Tennessee State University; Auburn University; Rhodes College in Memphis; Illinois Wesleyan; Fisk University; Columbia University, University of Missouri, Howard University; Harvard University; Temple University; University of Minnesota; University of Ibadan; Carroll College; University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

Despite good educations, many in-coming professionals were met with segregationist attitudes in Milwaukee. But they refused to permit that to bring them down. With prior models of unity, working together to change disparities, and insisting upon full adherence of the laws of the land, the new Milwaukeeans excelled and helped many others excel, as well.

Cherrye, a beacon of light, casts brilliant rays in Milwaukee. A graduate of Alabama State University with a Master's Degree from the National Education University, came to Milwaukee as a high school teacher with years of teaching experience. Her first assignment was at H.L. Palmer Elementary school where she guided MPS youngsters for over 29 years. Before her retirement, she taught math and reading to the deaf at Washington Irving School, through an interpreter.

An innovative teacher, she often used songs to guide the students and make learning fun. As we reflected on the life of Rosa Parks and Black History month, she recited a rap she taught her children years ago:

" Because of Sista Rosa, you know, we don't ride in the back of the bus, no more"

" Sista Rosa now was tired, one day, and the bus driver said "you gotta get up out'ta that seat.

"Sista Rosa said " No, not no more. I'm gonna sit right here and rest my feet"

"Now, the police came without fail and took Sista Rosa to jail.

"$ 14.00 was her fine. "Brother Martin Luther King knew it was his time."

"So the people of Montgomery sat down to talk. It was decided that all God's children should walk."

"Segregation came down to its knees. We obtained freedom and equality,

"So, Thank you Sister Rosa, you are the spark. That started our Freedom Movement.

" Thank you Sister Rosa Parks." (by Cherrye Ballard Trotman.)

Along with being a superb teacher, social worker, and recreation director at Siefert School several summers, Cherrye was a phenomenal wife to her late husband, Reginald Trotman, an entrepreneur originally from Panama, who settled the family in an alcove that remains rich in educated professionals.

Together, Cherrye and Reginald replicated the strong community experiences that each had known as youngsters and professionals before coming to Milwaukee.

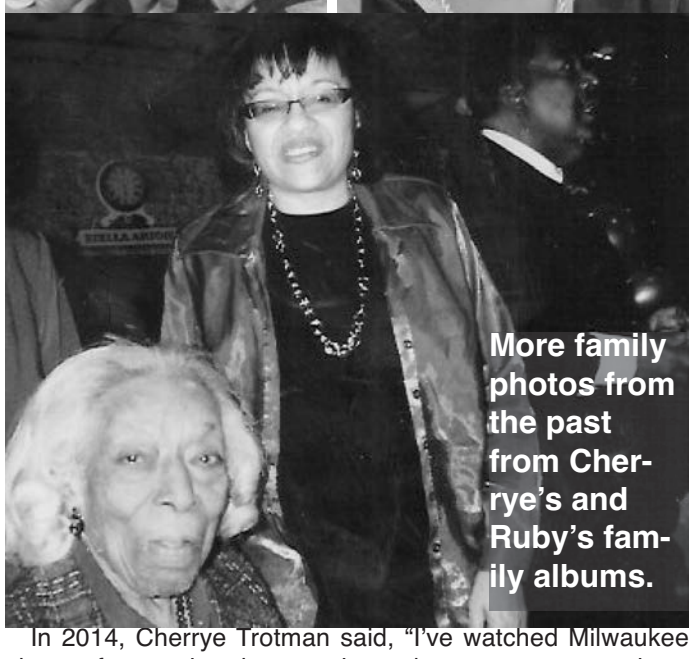
Education was the proverbial "bootstrap" both husband and wife honored for their children and the children of the neighborhood. Today, youngsters come to Mrs. Trotman for advice and tutoring. Her love for uplifting others centers her activities, talents and treasure, even in retirement.

The recipient of innumerable awards from educational, social, civic and newspaper organizations for more than forty plus years, her home is a museum of certificates, photographs, citations and various crystal recognitions for excellence and commitment to service. The stars in her crown abound.

Her heirs attest to her love, persistence and transfer of values. Her daughters have excelled beyond measure. With Spelman College and The Medical College of Wisconsin, graduate Dr. Enid Trotman Anyanwu, who married Lewis Anyanwu, are parents of daughters, Lura Janet, a Spelman College graduate, employed in Marketing in Chicago; and Leah Justice who graduated from Fisk, has a Masters from Harvard University, and teaches in New Orleans. Both girls are rapidly creating their own legacies of service and expansion.

Younger daughter, Eunice Frances, graduated with a Bachelor and Master's degree from Florida A & M, and resides in Missouri. Married to Wayne Frances, an engineer at Boeing Aircraft, they have three children. Jenelle, a Rhodes College graduate, will soon complete her Veterinary Medicine Degree at the University of Missouri.

Simone graduated from Temple University Medical School in 2015, and is presently a resident; and their brother, Aaron, nears graduation in electrical engineering from the University of Missouri. All respect their Black History roots, with expectant activism and continuing education.



More family photos from the past from Cherrye's and Ruby's family albums.

In 2014, Cherrye Trotman said, "I've watched Milwaukee change from a city where getting a degree was a natural trajectory for a better life, to seeing people talk about a GED as a good "enough" degree. Our push, as teachers, to get the uniforms and sashes for the Girl Scouts, from the Boston Store, was soon met with,"why do they have to have uniforms?"

"It was so apparent that many of the things we had pushed and promoted for good grades, good behavior and field trips and exposure-opportunities were being replaced by attitudes of "who do they think they are?"

Continuing, Mrs. Trotman, shared, "Teachers love their students and are willing to take each where they are and work with them to transfer knowledge, stimulate attitudes of discovery and personal confidence and skills. We are taught to encourage every student to become their best self; however, every teacher needs the full support of the school, the parents and the community. Therein lies the best environment for growing a student and growing a community."

Mrs. Trotman concluded by reiterating, "Our children are talented; just watch them manipulate their smart phones, their video games, television shows, their computers. We must commend their successes. And we must expand their exposures and their opportunities to see themselves beyond their immediate neighborhoods.

"We must continue to play that role for them. Our kids are worth it. We must value them and show them."

As we conclude Black History Month 2016, we again remember and applaud the history of Milwaukee pioneers like Ruby Ballard Young and Cherrye Ballard Trotman who came to Milwaukee as Black professionals with accredited college degrees and strong teaching experiences in the South and Midwest. And, Dr. Enid, the consummate healer who serves many community leaders in Milwaukee today.

While advanced training had been underpaid initially, each MPS hurdle was met with additional education, perseverance and advocacy that demanded the laws parallel the resumes and credentials they possessed. They inspired other teachers along the way.

Both Ballard sisters retired with benefits worthy of their degrees, their tenure, and their commitment to education in the city of Milwaukee.

Equally significant, their talents abound in their families, neighborhoods, and in cities throughout the United States. The richness of the Montgomery experience is evidenced today as BALLARD Beacons of Light permit their "Lights to Shine."

Milwaukee thanks you!
