“Racism is the epitome of bullying.”

The Bullying Challenge: A Close Look At Its Effects On The Black Child

Article courtesy of Successful Black Parenting.com

Bullying is an obvious fact that there are some very serious problems that have surfaced as a result of bullying, especially as it affects the Black child, particularly when the bullying is racism. Racism is the epitome of bullying.

Bullying greatly affects the ability of the child-bullies and their victims alike. It impedes academic progress, affects their well-rounded social and emotional development. This piece will look at some common issues as it relates to bullying and the ways a parent can help their child when they are victims of such acts.

The cyber-bullying challenge

Cyber bullying is regrettably on the increase and this has become a sore spot for many Black children.

An October 2014 study by the Pew Research Center states that 18 percent of all Black children who use the Internet have been negatively targeted. There have been cases of stalking, threats of physical harm, sexual harassment and other severe forms of harassment. Another 22 percent have suffered from less severe attacks like name calling or being embarrassed.

The National Center for Education Statistics and Bureau of Justice found that over 2 million black kids had experienced cyber-bullying (based on its 2010-2011 report).

The Youth Risk Behavior Surveillance, 2013 survey showed that 15 percent of Black high school students were bullied electronically.

The Online College report states that one in five cyber-bullied kids think about suicide while one in 10 actually attempts to commit suicide. These reports have been strongly linked to racial discrimination and the apathy with which society has risen to fight this scourge.

What schools got to do with this?

Bullying in schools has caused a host of negative physiological effects on the Black child. It affects their academic performance and alters their perception of school. Sadly, the societal norms and stereotypes can make schools unsafe for Black children.

This challenge has been discovered to be rooted in the presence of racism in society rather than being the general climate in most schools. Finding the right ways to reduce bullying in schools or protect the Black child is becoming increasingly complex.

It is time to ask the right questions

In order to fully understand the effects of bullying on the Black child, it is important that administrators are called to action and time to ask some hard questions so we can fully get to the root of this menace.

Who are those executing these acts?

Who are the victims?

Why is the Black child the target of their bullying acts?

What are the ways in which the Black child is bullied?

What is the solution to the issues of racism and the bullying of the Black child?

Most Black children who are victims of bullying often suffer from a lifetime of psychological scars. They also face a long run with poor academic performance. Bullied Black students are more likely to fall behind, miss school or eventually drop out.

What can you do as a Parent?

Parents or guardians of Black children can play a huge role in ensuring that they are protected from bullying and harassment.

Alert school administrators immediately.

Teach your child that they are unique and can be all they are destined to be.

Know that the goal of the bully is to create negativity. Build your child's positive self-esteem and help your child to rise above this scourge.

They can teach their children values that help to break long-held racial and ethnic stereotypes.

Speak with the bully's parents.

Remind your child that bullies try to break down others so they can feel good about themselves.

Approach the Home and School Association or Parent Teacher Association about creating a Bully-Free School Zone, including having staff who are trained to intercept and protect victims.

Thousands of Wisconsinites stand to gain financial help buying 2017 health coverage, but may not know it Already, about 8.8 million Americans, and 190,542 Wisconsinites, who buy health insurance through HealthCare.gov receive tax credits that help make coverage more affordable.

But about 12 million more Americans, including 144,000 Wisconsinites, may also be eligible for help during this Open Enrollment, but not know it.

This group includes:
• Current HealthCare.gov consumers: 6,000 Wisconsin consumers who didn't get tax credits last year could be eligible for tax credits in 2017, even if their income remains the same, because financial assistance moves along with rates.

That's 17 percent of currently unsubsidized Wisconsin Marketplace consumers.

• Off-Marketplace individual consumers: About 51,000 Wisconsinites who currently pay full price for individual coverage off-Marketplace could be eligible for tax credits if they purchase a 2017 plan through HealthCare.gov instead.

• The remaining uninsured: About 87,000 uninsured Wisconsinites earn incomes indicating they, too, could be eligible for financial assistance.

Nationwide, 84 percent of Marketplace-eligible uninsured Americans have incomes suggesting they are tax credit eligible. In Wisconsin, 62,809 people have already signed up for coverage in the first month of Open Enrollment, more than last year at this time.

But many more Wisconsinites might benefit from visiting HealthCare.gov before the December 15th deadline for January 1 coverage and checking out their options for affordable, quality health insurance.

Affordable by design. The Marketplace's tax credits are designed to keep pace with premium increases.

This means that for many consumers already receiving tax credits, the value of that financial assistance will increase this year to keep pace with the cost of coverage in their area. It also means that more individuals may qualify for tax credits as premiums rise.

For people eligible for financial assistance, the ACA specifies the share of income the consumer is expected to contribute toward health coverage.

The tax credits make up the difference between that amount and the actual cost of a consumer's benchmark (second-lowest-cost silver) plan.

For example, in 2017, a 27-year old in Wisconsin making $25,000 per year will pay $142 per month to purchase the benchmark plan, almost exactly the same as in 2016.

That's because the 27-year old will, on average, get a $162 tax credit – 36 percent higher than in 2016.

Check out your options. The Marketplace is open for business, and HHS is encouraging anyone who might need coverage next year to visit HealthCare.gov and check out their options before the December 15 deadline for coverage that starts January 1.

Millions of Americans could be surprised to find out they're eligible for financial assistance this year, even if they weren't last year, giving them affordable, quality options to choose from.

Visit HealthCare.gov to browse and shop for quality, affordable health plans. More than 63 percent of current Wisconsin Marketplace consumers will find plans for less than $75 per month, and the vast majority can save by coming back to actively shop instead of waiting to be re-enrolled in their current plan.

The state-by-state tables below show the number of consumers nationally who could benefit in 2017 from the financial assistance Marketplace tax credits provide.

If these consumers were to take advantage of the help offered on HealthCare.gov, they could find affordable, quality options.

When It Came To Breastfeeding, Black Moms Knew Best

Statistics have shown that there is a widening gap between Black and White breastfeeding initiation rates. It moved from 24 percentage points in 2000 to 16 percentage points in 2008.

As if this is not enough, Black infants have been discovered to have the lowest rates of breastfeeding initiation and duration. The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention states that only 62% of Black babies born in the US in 2010 started breastfeeding, compared to 79% of White babies.

After six months, only 36% were still breastfed, compared to 52% of White babies. We need to take a look at Black mothers nursing in a historical context. "When blacks came to this country, they breastfed their babies and often [slave] masters' babies," said Monique Sims-Harper, director of A More Excellent Way Health Improvement Organization and a spokeswoman for the California Breastfeeding Coalition, "after slavery ended, black women often continued to work as wet nurses for white families." They were the experts in the field. So the question arises, why black women have suddenly stopped breastfeeding their children?

In the African-American community, breastfeeding rates happens to be the lowest; these may be due to some reasons.

In Los Angeles, Krystal Nicole Duhaney, owner of Milky Mama, the only lactation treats company owned by an African-American woman, it was noticed that improving the health of African-American mothers and babies require ongoing and collaborative efforts organizations and individuals involved in Black mothers' lives, especially in areas where extended breastfeeding is not a common practice. She is passionate about breastfeeding for African-American babies. Breastfeeding can be difficult at times for all moms.

Duhaney admits there were some difficult times, particularly when she went back to work with being consistent with breastfeeding.

"When I returned to work after having my son, I noticed a decrease in my supply due to stress," she says. But after getting armed with her family's lactation cookies, Duhaney noticed her milk supply increased. Following the birth of her second child, a baby girl, Krystal was prepared to preempt any potential problems.

"After the birth a child, moms need support and guidance," she says Duhaney. She wishes to bring awareness to the benefits of breastfeeding while also taking head-on the issue of shaming nursing moms in public. She is also empowering mothers to breastfeed their babies whenever and wherever, since it is an act of love and nutriment for their child.

With breastfeeding awareness and Black moms like Duhaney bringing awareness to nursing, the number of Black mothers breastfeeding their babies is expected to increase.--article courtesy of successfulblackparenting.com

It's Okay To Raise Black Boys-To-Men With Emotions

In the summer of 2003, I became pregnant with my first child while planning my wedding to my then fiancé.

When I discovered I was having a son, I feared that as he grew older I wouldn't know what I could teach him about being a man.

Fast forward to the spring of 2004 when my son was finally born, I remember holding him, just wanting to protect him. Knowing there would be nothing I wouldn't do for him.

I kept telling myself that it was going to be okay being a single mom, but was it?

I found out early that I would need to be that man that his father refused to be. It's funny the strength we find in the face of certain obstacles. Have you ever tried potty training a male child? Every time I instructed him on what to do, he'd listen and then do what he saw me do. I tried everything including target practice with Fruit Loops in the toilet.

Even though he mimicked me, at eighteen months he was fully potty trained. It still took a while for him to stand when urinating.

I've been a single mom for twelve years now, though it wasn't by choice. I am a mother; unlike the mother I knew. Every day was hard.

We've been homeless twice. I spent many nights waiting for my son to go to bed so that I could cry.

I didn't want him to see me fall apart. My son is now twelve-years-old and is an honor student.

It has been extremely hard at times but, also very rewarding. In the face of many obstacles, I kept going.

I took part time jobs. I started a business. I lived. As parents, we tend to feel like we're not doing enough but one thing I learned many years ago, is that you are your child's first teacher.

My son saw me struggle every step of the way and because it has always been just the two of us, we have a very strong bond.

I have always encouraged him to express how he feels. One day on what felt like the worst day of my life, he came home from school and just hugged me.

He told me that he thought I was the strongest person he knew. He knew there was nothing he himself could not achieve, because of me following my dreams. Wow! I'd managed to raise this beautiful human being who has respect, manners, love and emotions.

I'd feared raising him to be too emotional in a society where men have historically been thought of as tough and macho. In the end, it is more important to raise a well-rounded human being by removing gender-types from your equation.

I know I still have his teenage years to go, but I do believe the strong foundation I built with him will endure throughout his lifetime.--Article by Shannen Azuredee via successfulblackparenting.com

The year was 1968! The Nobel Prize recipient, advocate of Non-violent resistance; Baptist Minister from Georgia; creator The "I Have a Dream" speech, that remains unparalleled as a design for respect, justice, equality and love for all people; fell on a Memphis, Tennessee, Lorraine Hotel balcony.

An assassin, James Earl Ray, with one shot, brought down Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., that April 4th morning. However, his life, his "Dream" continues to propel us daily in subtle ways and ways yet fulfilled.

The night President Obama was elected President, I cried. I cried for my Grandmothers, my Grandfathers, BIG MAMA (MY GREAT GRANDMOTHER). I would of never in my lifetime thought I would live to see a Black Man elected President of the United States. Dr. MLK, Jr. is who and what I was thinking of that night when I got home on my knees and said, "President Obama, I'm not dreaming anymore".

Black Babies Are At Risk Of Dying From SIDS

Sudden Infant Death Syndrome also known as SIDS is the sudden and unexplained death of a healthy infant who is younger than one-year-old.

It's a very terrifying phenomenon because unlike other diseases and illnesses it does not have any warning symptoms.

SIDS usually occurs between the ages of two and five months and is more prevalent in babies of African descent.

Studies show that African-American infants are twice as likely and Native American infants are about three times more likely to die from SIDS.

The babies die in their sleep which has given the syndrome the nickname Crib Death.

SIDS claims the lives of about

2,500 each year in the United States alone. In Africa, SIDS kills more babies because the awareness is very low.

A lot of research has been done on SIDS to find the causes and preventive measures that can be used to save babies from this unpredictable fate.

The hypothesized cause of Crib Death is the blockage of airways of a baby or inhaling its own exhaled air while it's asleep. A few precautions can be taken to prevent SIDS.

Black families often follow traditional child rearing advice that is the opposite what the American Academy of Pediatrics recommends.

We tend to put our infants to bed on their stomachs and even introduce cereal in a baby bottle before the infant is at the stage of development to start solid foods in order to get the baby to sleep through the entire night.

In a campaign called Back to Sleep, the recommended way to put babies to sleep is known as the "supine position." This just means babies are to be put on their backs to sleep instead of on their stomachs. This reduces the number of babies who die from SIDS.

Another precaution that should be taken to reduce the chances of SIDS is keeping all stuffed toys and pillows away from babies when they sleep to prevent them from breathing their own carbon dioxide, which is in their exhaled breath.

Avoiding smoking before or after childbirth is another preventive measure for SIDS because may affect their central nervous system. Infants of mothers who smoke during pregnancy are three times more likely to die of SIDS.

Also researchers believe that breastfeeding may help protect babies from infections that increase the risk of SIDS.

Breast milk being the healthiest type of milk for babies is always best.

Pre-and-postnatal care is believed to be another way to prevent SIDS.

Babies who have regular check-ups have a lower chance of dying from SIDS. Researchers also recommend that babies sleep with a pacifier. It should not be forced on the child though.

If the child is uncomfortable with the pacifier it's fine to discontinue using it.

Also keep your baby close by when the baby sleeps but always on a firm mattress in a crib and keep the temperature cool.

Warm babies have a higher risk of SIDS as they sleep deeper when they are warm making it difficult to wake up.

The research for Sudden Infant Death Syndromes is still in the early stages.

Babies less than one-year-old should be cared for with extreme care and precaution.--Article courtesy of successfulblackparenting.com

St. Ann Center for Intergenerational Care will hold a public hearing Jan. 5, 2017 from 4 – 6 pm to solicit comments and provide information on a proposed Brownfield Cleanup and redevelopment at its Bucyrus Campus, 2450 W. North Ave. The meeting will allow residents to voice concerns, learn about current conditions and plans to mitigate and remove affected soils. St. Ann Center received $400,000 in EPA grants to remove or cap the dirt piles. The work is scheduled for April 2017.

An Information Repository containing environmental assessments, remediation plans and other documents is available at the Bucyrus Campus or can be found at <https://stanncenter.org/about/our-bucyrus-campus/>. Public comments can be sent directly to John Jansen, Project Manager at jjansen@stanncenter.org or St. Ann Center, 2801 E. Morgan Ave., Milwaukee, WI 53207.
