Reader raps NAACP position on area charters

To the editor:
Mikel Holt's story (column) on the NAACP's decision to fight school charters was as enlightening as it was disturbing. While I sometimes get confused by Mr. Holt's over use of sarcasm, his message is generally on target.

I join him and others in my confusion about the direction of the NAACP. It seems like the organization wants to block the school house door for poor families, something they fought against during the 1960s. Is the organization out of touch, or is there another agenda I don't understand?

In fact, what makes this agenda all the more confusing is that there are so many important issues the organization can, and should be working on, but we hear nothing. Instead they want to stop my kids from attending University charters, when the alternatives are MPS schools where kids are failing. I don't get it.

For eight decades Social Security has provided a needed safety net

For the past 81 years Social Security has provided a financial safety net for Americans. It continues to support and provide income for people who are retired, disabled or a survivor of a loved one. Social security offers a foundation for financial security for millions of people who would otherwise not be able to financial support themselves. While the bulk of your retirement savings will come from your employer sponsored plan, personal savings and investments, Social Security helps replace about 40% of preretirement earnings for the average worker.

Congress recently passed new rules that affect how and when married couples can claim Social Security. Let's explore what those changes are and what they mean.

The first change affects "file and suspend". If you suspend your benefit after April 29, 2016, benefits payable to others on your record are also suspended. The second change affects "restricted applications". If you were born after January 1, 1954, you must file for your own benefit before you can collect spousal benefits.

The best way to describe the changes is to use an example. Mary and John are full retirement age and want to use half of John's benefit to live on while both spouses continue to earn credits to increase their own benefits by up to 8% per year. To do this, John "files and suspends" and Mary files a "restricted application" to receive 50% of John's benefit. Both continue to earn credits to increase their own benefit while Mary collects the spousal benefit. The new rule no longer allows couples to do this. Mary cannot collect a spousal benefit on John's record if he requests suspension after April 29, 2016. Now, Mary can only collect the spousal benefit if John is collecting his. Let's be clear, you can still "file and suspend" but your spouse and no one else can receive a benefit based on your work record during the suspension. If you suspended before April 30, 2016, the old rule will continue to apply.

The second change affects Mary's ability to file for spousal benefits and delay filing on her own record. If Mary was born before January 2, 1954, she can still file for spousal benefits at full retirement age without having to file on her own record. If Mary was born after January 1, 1954, she must file for her own benefit first, even if she is full retirement age.

These new rules now really require couples to think smart and carefully about the best time to claim for benefits. Things to consider are your health, financial situation, financial goals, and how long you can and want to work. Each couple's situation is different and you have to make the best decision for your circumstance. Everyone is eligible to claim at 62 but your amount will be greatly reduced; however, if you wait to claim at 70 your benefit increases by 76%. The goal here is to delay claiming as long as you can. Once you begin receiving benefits that is what you will collect for life.

Got questions about your social security, AARP's Social Security Q&A Tool (www.aarp.org/moneytools) can help. For more information on the new rule, other enactments to the legislation and maximizing your benefits, visit www.ssa.gov. The Social Security Administration encourages checking your account regularly so you are aware of your benefits.

Robert Clark, a Social Security expert for AARP.

Politicians should protect our social security

To the editor:

The average monthly Social Security benefit for retirees in this country is only $1,332, but politicians like Senator Ron Johnson act like seniors are abusing the system. We have worked all our lives paying into Social Security, and the benefits we collect now have been earned.

Recently, politicians have even gone after the Social Security Administration. Cuts to the SSA make no sense--it makes it harder for seniors to get the help they need. Not to mention administrative costs only make up .9% of annual benefits.

We need Congress to get its act together and protect this vital government program. Senator Johnson needs to know that seniors are paying attention, and we won't stand for any attempts to cut or privatize Social Security!

'Clowns' spotted on local highway

Did Jesus Weep: Because Black Lives Matter Too?

by Keith Magee

For the last four visible years America has endured, once again, the polarizing effects of racism and injustice. Yet, instead of the perpetrators wearing white sheets and lynching African Americans and with coral ropes as they did decade's prior, they now wear blue uniforms and use issued firearms.

The loss of Trayvon, Eric, Tamir, Sandra, Freddie, Korryn, Alton, Terence, Keith, and all of the others we name, came not because their assassins feared them but, because they believed their lives didn't matter. Secretly, I've wept at my core when I hear the news that they have taken another life. Even when I'm driving my car with my 2-year-old Zayden, I pray that our lives will matter.

As the numbers of African-American lives continue to be disproportionately taken, many onlookers (primarily Millennials), have come with demands and questions about whether those in power believe that #BlackLivesMatter. And if so, why is injustice prevailing in the loss of these lives? The Black Lives Matter movement does not assert that other's lives do not matter. It aims to draw attention for the need for understanding if those who enact, execute, frame and inform the law also value Black lives.

In my youth, every evening we had to offer a scripture, after prayer, before we could partake of supper. We would all eagerly go for "Jesus Wept" because it was the easiest to remember. As I sit most evenings unable to eat, sickened to my stomach, praying and searching the scripture for meaning, I ponder why did Jesus weep.

The scriptures have three recordings of Jesus weeping. The most notable is because he loved Lazarus, and Martha and Mary. Even in knowing that Lazarus would be raised again, Jesus' human nature and pain mourned, both in relation to their present pain and even their unbelief. Jesus also wept when the chosen people failed to keep the city 'holy' and set apart from other world powers ...He saw the city and wept over it. The other prominent presence of his weeping is found in a garden. Jesus wept sweat "...like great drops of blood," as he prayed to his Father, knowing his time had come to die for a humanity that might never get it.

Why did Jesus weep? Was it because he was fully human and, yet, fully divine, feeling the spiritual and nature pain of the people? Was it from his humanity and divinity, where he felt love, disappointment, loss, grief and sadness-every human emotion that evokes tears from the heart?

One doesn't have to be dead to grieve death and dying. Grieving calls us into an experience of raw immediacy that is often devastating. In A Grief Observed, a collection of reflections on the experience of bereavement, author C.S. Lewis reveals that "No one ever told me that grief was so much like fear.

Tears, the lachrymal gland, responds to the emotion of awe, pleasure, love and, yes, sorrow. They are the fluids that rest in the ducts that can cause you to lose sight and can run down into your nose, all because of sorrow not joy. And, when the heart weeps it is beyond the liquid into the small channels that flow into the tear sac.

It is a pain that is likening to the sound of sorrow from the mothers, fathers, family members, who have lost their loved ones in the midst of these murders and executions.

"I am not afraid, but the sensation is like being afraid. The same fluttering in the stomach, the same restlessness, the yawning. I keep on swallowing." As an African American male, I can relate to Lewis because seemingly everyday my life is at risk. I swallow grief and fear that I, or one of my brothers, our children, or mothers, are next.

It was the sorrow of a suffering people that gave cause to ecumenical faith leaders becoming the catalyst for a civil rights movement for a "Righteous America."

These faith leaders used their sacred spaces to address the grave concerns for the least-advantaged among them. As an American society founded on a hunger and thirst for religious freedom was turning a deaf ear to the pleas of a marginalized people, certain that God's creation suffered no stratification; these likeminded humanitarians, across racial identity, leading the charge for equality. They understood why Jesus wept, as did Jehovah, Allah, the Buddha, and many others spiritual leaders who wept too.

Recently, America lost an African-American male musical icon, Prince, though not at the hands of those in Blue. I mostly remember him for Purple Rain, in particular "When Doves Cry." Though it is understood that these lyrics spoke to a failed relationship between two people, I purport that it speaks more to the sound of the doves. When doves cry, as they soar, it is a sorrowful song and yet in the sound we find a message of life, hope, renewal and peace.

Could the Prince of Peace be sending us a prophetic message that even in these moments of tragedy there is hope for better days? As we stand through our sorrow, will we be able to earnestly declare that #BlackLives-Matter too?

Superintendent, board should be applauded

Statement of Common Council President Ashanti Hamilton

The recent news that Milwaukee Public Schools have won a reprieve from state intervention is a credit to the hard work and dedication of Superintendent Dr. Darianne Driver, the Board of School Directors, board President Mark Sain, the district's teachers and administration, parents and community advocates.

Thanks to their tough decisions and a commitment to providing quality education to our children, Milwaukee Public Schools were able to meet criteria and benchmarks for improvement necessary to avoid mandatory participation in the state-imposed Opportunity Schools Partnership Program.

While the policy conversation continues around education reform, city schools are at the vanguard of changes in the way we shape our young people and reshape urban education.

With hardworking teachers and an intense focus on academics, the city is dedicated to working with MPS to continue to make gains in improving student achievement

URBAN My DIALOGUE...

By Torre "ToeJoe" Johnson

Strength from life experiences

Some of my subjects are often those of negative situations and behaviors, but as I write and discuss them I am as positive as I can be. I am a person that depends on reality but I also respect dreams. I will always house the need to know and continue my search for new opportunities and different approaches to help other individuals rise to higher levels in their lives.

My strengths come from life experiences. I've found that giving back has been a form of repentance. With that being said I work hard to continue my climb. I have embraced both the "No one should be left behind" and "Only we can save ourselves" concept. I also believe everyone should have the opportunity to live comfortably and experience peace, freedom and love which should be shared equally. Who else should we truly trust to conquer these things other than ourselves?

So when I am told that I am much too negative with my thoughts and should focus on more positive things, I shake my head and say "My focus is the positive as well as all the barriers that prevent us from reaching our growth and goals, I will become all positive when the negativity ceases to exist and is no longer accepted as the norm."

Most people allow themselves to become offended. They become this way by suggestions or when a non-traditional approach has been introduced. It's important to know that constructive criticism followed by creative solutions is a must. I also agree, we as people need more love and more hugs. Some people need tough love, and to be shown that someone cares enough to not take advantage of them.

If we're not completely focused on successful realities we will remain lost. We continuously make the mistake of looking somewhere else for help when we have competent groups and individuals right here in Milwaukee. These role models are the ones who need to be the lifeline and architects that help construct our growth. With that being said, I am pro-positive when it comes to my thoughts, but my lane is to first recognize and then avoid the negative contribution that crushes our potential to grow.

Leader of Milwaukee Open Housing marches passes Jabo Friend was original Commando

Funeral services will be held Friday, 12 noon, for one of the original Commandoes, the civil rights group that led the Open Housing Marches that helped end segregation in Milwaukee.

Larnal 'Jabo' Friend was a member of the group of Black men who led thousands of Black Milwaukee in a year long campaign in support of a city 'open housing ordinance' that would end legal housing segregation in Milwaukee in 1967. He also participated as a member of the NAACP Youth Council.

Friend was born June 9, 1948 to the union of George Friend Sr and Eller Mae (Toombs/Bursey) in Lauderdale County, Tennessee

He moved to Milwaukee at a young age and attended Milwaukee Public Schools.

As an adult Larnal (JABO) was greatly loved and a huge part of the business' community. He owned and operated LF Transportation Trucking, night clubs, restaurants and a car wash.

In his leisure he restored classic cars.

His favorites were a Rolls Royce and Triple Black Camaro.

Larnal 'Jabo' Friend

Friend was known as a trend setting dresser, and he loved R&B music and soul food 'cooked from scratch.'

According to a family member, he "always told everyone he encountered what they needed to hear, NOT what they wanted to hear. He was very outspoken and didn't mind if the truth hurt. Family and friends included.

Jabo departed this life on October 11 doing what he loved: fishing at Lake Monona in Dane County. This was one of many favorite places he fished, relaxed and enjoyed the peace and tranquility that came with being outdoors.

He leaves to cherish his memory two daughters Jessica (Gregory), Shelley (Rodney); two sons, Larnal aka Fatty(Alicia) and Kevin (Shontell). Grandchildren Jessica Monique, Gregory, Sandy, Nadia, Kollione, Brandon, Ashley(Parris), Star'Tyana, Taika Jaden, London, Daionna and Katlynn. Show urges Christians to pray, fast Christian Newswire/ -- In God We Trust. The message is simple, powerful, and universal, crossing racial, political and socio-economic lines. The television special In God We Trust declares it is time for Christians to pray, fast, and then to vote for the candidates of their choice in the upcoming election.

Facing the stark reality that over 27 million registered Christian voters did not vote in the 2012 election, the leaders involved with this project believe that a responsible turnout of Christian voters in November will pave the way of hope for our nation.

"Most American Christians will agree that we have drifted far from our Judeo-Christian values and face perilous times as a result," states Don Black. "We believe that it is time to take our country back to our roots and to faith in God."

In God We Trust viewers are encouraged to sign an online In God We Trust proclamation, pledging to pray, to fast, to vote and to place their trust in Divine Providence. A downloadable e-version of the devotional In God We Trust 21 Day Action Plan is available to guide participants through 21 days of prayer and fasting for the nation.

This television special is spearheaded by Don Black, president and CEO of Cornerstone Network, along with other ministry broadcasting partners including Pat Robertson, founder of the Christian Broadcasting Network, Robert Jeffress, senior pastor of First Baptist Church in Dallas and Pathway to Victory TV and radio program, Andrew Wommack, founder and president of Andrew Wommack Ministries and host of The Gospel Truth TV program.

Also adding their voices are Joyce Meyer, founder and president of Joyce Meyer Ministries and host of Enjoying Everyday Life, Perry Stone, founder of Perry Stone Ministries-Voice of Evangelism/OCI and host of Manna-Fest TV show, Henry Fernandez, founder of Henry Fernandez Ministries and senior pastor of The Faith Center, and Gordon Robertson, CEO of the Christian Broadcasting Network. It is hosted by Kristi Watts, former co-host of The 700 Club. More than 150 million homes can watch the In God We Trust television special nationwide.

"Christian leaders should not use their platforms to promote their personal choices... it's our divine call to focus on Biblical truths and God's purposes, not on specific political candidates. I do not share many of either candidate's moral values and life choices.

Public library to host ‘safe’ but scary haunted house

Shriek freely and pardon the screams. Milwaukee Public Library is inviting visitors to leave their in- side voices at the front door once again and continuing to dispel the notion that libraries are silent establish- ments that collect books with the next Library Loud Days event: Haunted Central.

For two days, starting October 22 at sundown (5:57 p.m.) Central Li- brary, 814 W. Wisconsin Avenue, will be one giant haunted house for all ages. There will be haunted-themed activities throughout the building and the main attraction, the truly haunted part, is an actual part of the library no one ever sets foot in. And, it’s for good reason; it’s the Forbidden Fourth Floor. Enter if you dare.

Library Loud Days is part of an ongoing campaign to engage the Mil- waukee community and make Mil- waukee Public Library locations modern and culturally relevant desti- nations full of energy and excite- ment. The goal is to make noise, even by shrieking and screaming, in the community and showcase all of the resources the libraries have to offer while helping local families learn, grow and succeed.

In addition to launching Library Loud Days, Milwaukee Public Li- brary has also extended hours at several branches to provide greater access to residents and extended a fine forgiveness program to recon- nect patrons and their families to all the great opportunities at MPL.

“We are thrilled to build on the ex- citement from our Library Loud Days launch this summer with the first ever Haunted Central,” said Li- brary Director Paula Kiely. “Being loud in the library is a new way of thinking, but it’s resonating. Chang- ing the way people think about their libraries has brought new patrons to the many offerings of MPL, which have been enhanced by expanded ac- cess through forgiving fines and in- creasing service hours.”

Further details about Library Loud Days and other Milwaukee Public Library initiatives and events can be found on Milwaukee Public Li- brary’s Facebook page and website at www.mpl.org. For specific event in- formation, visit any Milwaukee Pub- lic Library branch or www.mpl.org/librarylouddays.

Wright to read poetry at MU

Jay Wright, a prominent African-American poet, will give a poetry reading on Tuesday, Oct. 25, at 3:30 p.m. in Weasler Auditorium as part of the Marquette Forum series.

The appearance is open to students, faculty and the public.

Wright also will return in 2017 for an event that will feature a reading of one of his plays.

Praised for its evocative language, introspective tone and mythological imagery, Wright’s work has won many honors, including the Lannan Literary Award for Poetry, Guggenheim and MacArthur fellowships and Yale Uni- versity’s prestigious Bollingen Prize. His plays, essays and poetry generally focus on a rediscovery of African- American heritage through historical study and personal experience.

Wright’s recent work includes the book-length poems The Presentable Art of Reading Absence (2008), Polyno- mials and Pollen: Parables, Proverbs, Paradigms, and Praise for Lois (2008) and the collection Disorientations: Groundings (2013).

Born in 1934 in New Mexico, Wright’s early exposure to Mexican, Spanish and Navajo cultures has had a last- ing effect on his poetry. His poems explore history from this multicultural standpoint and often take the form of allegorical journeys and spiritual quests.

Wright’s visit is funded by the Rojzman Foundation to fund readings and lecture in the Philosophy Department and the English Department. The Rojzman Foundation previously donated the St. Joan of Arc Chapel located on the Marquette campus and a collection of art works for the Haggerty Museum of Art.

Winners of awards at the My City My Biz Expo showed off their awards at the con- clusion of the event recently. Acclaimed African poet TJ Dema to appear here

TJ Dema, an acclaimed poet, performer and arts administrator from Botswana, Africa, will deliver a workshop and performance in Milwaukee next week.

TJ Dema is a founding member of Botswana's spoken word movement, former chair of the Writers' Association of Botswana, and runs a boutique arts and performance management organization that seeks to craft new ways of approaching the business of art. Dema's poetry is widely anthologized and she travels the globe as a performer and facilitator.

Dema's tie to the city is through Milwaukee Artist of the Year and Still Waters Collective founder, Dasha Kelly. The two taught and performed together during one of Kelly's visits to Botswana as a U.S. Embassy Arts Envoy. Dema will deliver a poetry workshop on Wednesday, October 19 from 4:30 – 5:30pm at Readers' Choice Bookstore, 1950 N. King Dr. She will perform and answer questions from 6-7pm. The workshop is $25. The reading is free, donations welcomed.

WRITER'S BLOCK

(Me) Hello!
(Him) Hey baby?
(Me) Who is this? Because I know this is not the person who abused me some time ago.

Uh huh! No you didn't!
I tried to tell you but you wouldn't listen.
I tried to tell you when you had ALL of me,
That if you wouldn't change then I would have to leave.

What's so funny? You, calling me now.
Telling me you love me, you miss me. Like I'm supposed to bow down and forget all of the pain.
Mental, physical, emotional strain on my body, mind and soul.
All of which you once controlled. But not today. No More!

What was that? What did you say?
You want me back and you've changed your ways?
Hahaha! That's funny, yet I pray that it is true, and Maybe your next woman you won't make black and blue.

Don't wait around for me because I told you I'm through.

You see I've learned that the problem was never me
So when I changed I changed for the better and now I am FREE!
No longer am I weak and frail or even afraid.
The woman I am today is the woman God made, out of the ashes rises a Queen.
You're no longer wanted so please exit this scene.

Hold on. Just Stop! Because you're waisting your time
Your spell has been broken. I now control my own mind.
And my heart... well it's mending itself
No longer waiting for you on my emotional shelf.

For once will you listen? Please listen to me!
I love living life as a VIP Queen.
I am Confident, proud, strong and powerful.

I love the woman I am becoming, yes I do. She's wonderful
So sad that you will never ever know.

Now now, shhh! I've waisted enough of my time sharing with you a small piece of my mind.
Go on with your life and I trully wish you well Because I'm one of the lucky ones. I escaped hell.

After today, don't call or write. Don't try to come and see me in the middle of the night. I said No More! And I meant what I said!
Trick no good, you're no longer in my head.
On October 30th I'll walk as a VIP Queen
Proud, strong and powerful. Now exit this scene.

Election two weeks away: Which actor best portrayed president?

By Richard G. Carter

With the 2016 election set for November 8 -- just three weeks away -- which actors, over the years, were most effective portraying the president of the United States in a major motion picture or a television movie or mini-series?

Following, in order, are my 20 favorites -- including some performers better known than others:

James Earl Jones ("The Man" 1972) -- Jones is senator-president pro tempore of the Senate, who reluctantly becomes America's first Black chief executive after freak disaster in Europe kills president. With Janet MacLachlan, as his wife, and Barbara Rush.

William Devane ("The Missiles of October" 1974) -- Taut account of the Cuban Missile Crisis, with dead-ringer Devane as a convincing President John F. Kennedy. With Martin Sheen as Robert F. Kennedy and Howard da Silva as Nikita Khrushchev.

Henry Fonda ("Fail Safe" (1964) -- A nuclear exchange looms as a computer glitch sends U.S. bombers to attack Moscow. Fonda, as a JFK-like president, makes a decision. Walter Matthau, Frank Overton, Dan O'Herlihy and Dom DeLouise offer strong support.

Charles Durning ("Twilight's Last Gleaming" 1974) -- As a sincere president mentored by Roscoe Lee Browne, he must act as ex-Air Force general (Burt Lancaster) seizes a missile site with escaped cons and threatens to launch against Russia. Tingling.

Fredric March ("Seven Days in May" 1964) -- March is a Cold War president with bad poll numbers facing a hero general (Burt Lancaster) plotting military coup. Kirk Douglas as general's aide uncovers the plan. With Ava Gardner and Edmond O'Brien.

Peter Sellers ("Dr. Strangelove" 1964) -- Sellers plays president, mad scientist and British captain. Loony general (Sterling Hayden) sends nukes against Russia. James Earl Jones and Slim Pickens lead attack, George C. Scott tries to stop it. Funny and scary.

Martin Landau ("By Dawn's Early Light" 1990) -- Renegade Soviets fire nukes from Turkey at Russia. NATO is blamed and America attacked. The president (Landau) and Soviet boss talk. James Earl Jones, Powers Boothe and Rip Torn and provide tension.

Richard Crenna ("The Day Reagan Was Shot" 2001) -- On March 30, 1981, a deranged John W. Hinckley nearly killed President Ronald Reagan. Stunning work by Crenna, as the stricken Reagan, and an oily Richard Dreyfuss as scary Alexander Haig.

Lee Tracy ("The Best Man" 1964) -- An influential ex-president (Tracy), dangles his endorsement. The driven contenders -- Henry Fonda and Cliff Robertson -- ponder using damaging info on each other. Gore Vidal's smug insight into political conventions.

Anthony Hopkins ("Nixon" 1995) -- Brooding portrait of President Richard Nixon by Hopkins, in a riveting, Oscar-nominated performance that brilliantly captures his insecurities. Top co-stars include Joan Allen, Ed Harris, Powers Boothe and J.T. Walsh.

Rock Hudson ("World War III" 1982) -- Russian paratroops sabotage Alaska oil pipeline due to U.S. grain embargo. Tough president (Hudson) meets Soviet premier (Brian Keith) in Iceland. David Soul and Jeroen Krabbe are opposing combat officers.

Franchot Tone ("Advise and Consent" 1962) -- Inside look at big-time politics as a dying president (Tone) nominates new secretary of state (Henry Fonda). Fine work by Walter Pidgeon, Charles Laughton, Lew Ayres and Don Murray, who hides a dirty secret.

Alexander Knox ("Wilson" 1944) -- Superb biography of America's star-crossed World War I-era president, Woodrow Wilson (Knox), who saw his vision for a League of Nations rejected by his own country. With Charles Coburn and Geraldine Fitzgerald.

Ralph Bellamy ("Sunrise at Campobello" 1960) -- Wheelchair-bound President Franklin D. Roosevelt (Bellamy) wields political power while living with his debilitating polio. Inspiring work by look-alike Bellamy and Greer Garson as Eleanor, the First Lady.

Jeff Bridges ("The Contender" 2000) -- After vice president dies, cunning Bridges, as the president, nominates a female senator (Joan Allen) as the new veep. A vindictive congressman (Gary Oldman) dredges up a sex tape to humiliate her in public hearings.

Michael Douglas ("The American President" 1995) -- A horny (ala Bill Clinton) president (Douglas), foolishly misbehaves with a lobbyist (Annette Bening), ignoring election year implications. Also starring Martin Sheen and Richard Dreyfuss.

Ed Flanders ("MacArthur" 1977) -- A fine war-time look at iconic Gen. Douglas MacArthur (Gregory Peck), fired by President Harry S. Truman (Flanders) during the Korean War. Flanders' dig at Gen. Dwight Eisenhower's political ambition is a highlight.

Van Heflin ("Tennessee Johnson" 1942) -- Headstrong VP Andrew Johnson (Heflin), becomes president when Abraham Lincoln is assassinated. He clashes with Congress and is impeached. With Lionel Barrymore, Marjorie Main and Ruth Hussey.

Walter Huston ("Abraham Lincoln" 1930) -- Compelling look at the tragic 15th president, with the great Huston in peak form as Lincoln preserves the Union. Among many movie portrayals, Huston's is the most memorable in this vintage masterpiece.

Snoop Doggy Dud in denial about our history

doesn't mean the self denigrating junk he starred in like "Soul Plane," "Snoop Dogg's Hood of Horror" and "Iceberg Slim, Portrait of a Pimp."

Actually, now that I think about it, those three Doggy films are also "slave" films. Or, more accurately, they are films produced by Black folks with a "slave" mentality. OK, sorry, I'm being too harsh: Let's give the Dud his due. He did note that his angst was against movies that "dog brothers out," as if that's the only "Black history" available for depiction of Black people.

Of course that assessment also falls on its face since there has been dozens of "Black" movies and televisions shows as compared to a handful of history productions. Strangely, the Dud doesn't have a problem with the plethora of so-called "Black" productions that cast us in a bad light, portraying lead Black characters as criminals, buffoons or psychopaths.

I can think of dozens of caricatures, including roles of Kevin Hart and Mike Epps that seem to overshadow the dignified characters played by Denzel Washington or Morgan Freeman.

And let's not get into a discussion about Madea films. While there is generally a moral, cultural lesson in the Tyler Perry films, it's hard to see beyond the stereotype the big butt, wise talking Aunt Mamie character.

But, I digress. Said the Dud: "They just gonna' keep beating that stuff in our head for how they did us...I don't understand America, they want to just keep showing that stuff how they did us...100 years ago. But guess what, we taking the same abuse. When you gonna' make a series about the successes of Black folks?"

Valid point? Maybe so, but the proud producer of porn goes on to proclaim, "real niggers like myself (will) protest (those slave films). Let's make our own sh.t about today, and how we inspire people today."

I guess inspiration as he defines Congressman

countable to the community, responsive to the needs of the grass root masses.

"Milwaukee may be the best place to initiate a new multi-racial movement because it is the most segregated city in America. By tearing down the housing barriers and building a new coalition based on mutual needs, will not only remove Milwaukee's stigma, but also move the country forward.

"We need to build an organization that supports racial solidarity; we can't be stuck in this cycle," he said.

"We must move forward as a society, to reach out to each other instead of turning again each other."

The most effective class of people to carry out that agenda are not politicians, but grass root organizers. "King was never a politician, and I never met a politician who can get a bill passed by himself. He needed grass root mobilization."

it is telling young men to be pimps, and calling Black women "ho's and bitches."

Again I digress.

I remain confused about who Dud is referring to when he criticizes "America" for producing the slavery films. I assume he was talking about White people, but here again, he's off base.

"Roots" was written by a Black man, Alex Haley, to trace his ancestry back to the Motherland (that's Africa, Snoop, where all life originated and God decided to plant His first shade tree and Black people to sit up under it.

(By the way Snoop, we didn't come from some country called "Niggerland," nor did we arrive at Ellis Island on Soul Plane.)

Moreover, a brother produces Underground, and Birth of a Nation is produced, and stars an excellent cast led by its lead writer and director.

The storyline is based on uncensored history, and its title should be worthy of discussion by itself, because it was also the title of turn of century racist propaganda film that gave "birth" to the Klu Klux Klan, lynchings and the establishment of apartheid to replace slavery. That's real history, Mr. Dud, a chapter that led America down a path we have yet to detour from.

It's an important page of history our children need to be educated about, whether it is painful or not.

Or maybe because it is painful. Learning our history—including our captivity—is like taking an immunization shot. It will hurt, but it also will make you healthier in the long run.

If the acknowledgement and study of our ancestors' survival as captives under the cruelest system of enslavement known to mankind isn't painful, our insensitivity implies we are out of touch with reality and are ignorant of how our yesterday shapes our today. Or maybe we're smoking those doggy weed briskets that the Dud is proud of inhaling in public.

Social scientists have theorized that much of Black America suffers from a form of PTSD that is rooted in the painful experiences of slavery that continue to plague our subconscious.

Others, including myself, believe too many of us (particularly those like Doggy Dud who look in the mirror and see a "real nigger" staring back), continue to live under a cloud of slavery.

This hypothesis surmises that Willie Lynch's socialization process worked.

Lynch supposedly taught "slave owners" on how to control their property. The process included pitting light against dark, big against small, castrated men against overbearing women and using Christianity to pacify them.

If correctly carried out, the slaves would see themselves as "niggers" for several hundreds years, generation after generation.

The Lynch indoctrination process is carried out in the remake of Roots, which the Dogg didn't watch out of ignorance (or stupidity).

Explains Lamin Jatta, a descendant of Kunta Kinte and a consultant for the remake, "Roots brings a consciousness to our mind, to our generation, and to the next generation. It is a true story, our story, and we have to tell it. I know that our story didn't begin with slavery. So Roots tells us where we began before we were enslaved—we were Kings and Queens, we were royalty, warriors, we had knowledge, we had life, and we had joy."

He continues, "In the video you (Dogg) stated, 'I don't understand America, they want to keep showing the abuse that we took.'"

"But have we learned enough about us being Kings and Queens before the time of slavery, or what life was like before it, also?"

"So, Snoop Dogg, you should be championing it," he continued.

"You should be proud of Roots because the culture behind the message in your music is poisonous compared to Roots. You use the N-word while getting high—what is that contributing to this world? If I were you Snoop, I would look back into history, Roots tells us how we came here and how we were betrayed by whites.

"Neither side was shown in the best light. Enslaved women were raped and killed in front of their kids while the Whites who were doing this considered themselves Christians. Then came another generation of whites—whites that separated themselves as pure Christians. They were telling our ancestors; whatever they had been through, there will be another side of their pain where there will be joy again.

"We have to take that positive message and send it on to the next generation. That is why it is important every person from every culture in this world should watch it.

Excellent points. I would only add that ours was the first civilization. Our people created math, and science and astrology. Our ancestors, Mr. Dogg, created the first college known to mankind when Europeans were living in caves. And centuries before that, our ancestors realized that there was but one God.

Far too few of our people are aware of our history before the Mayflower. Our children are lost because they don't know. And they can't create a path for the future unless and until they figure out where they came from and how they got here.

When I look in the mirror, I see the descent of kings and queens, not the nigger (excuse my use of the word, I detest and normally would not use it, but it's soooooo appropriate here), the Doggs sees. And I share my mirror with my children and every one else who will listen and are interested in empowerment.

If you see the descendent of the man who created math in the mirror, you know you can do it. If you know we created medicine, you know it's in your blood and you can serve. And if you realize your ancestors survived slavery, redefined Christianity and overcame the odds, you know there is nothing you can't do.

I'm thinking about purchasing a video of Roots and mailing it to the Dud. Maybe when he's in one of his usual dope clouds, he'll mistake it for one of his porn movies and put it in his VCR. Who knows, he may learn something that'll get him higher than the weed he's using.
