Obamas defy dysfunctional stereotype of African American families

By Gracie Bonds Staples (from her "Life with Gracie" column) - The Atlanta Journal-Constitution Posted: Friday, January 06, 2017

As I've done for at least the last half of my life, I spent New Year's Eve at church with my husband and one of our two daughters.

That's a particularly special time for me because it marks the end of the old with God, the one who saw me safely through to yet another new beginning. In the African-American tradition, we call that observance Watch Night, a time to celebrate our freedom from slavery.

As the night wore on, as President Barack Obama's name and that of his wife, Michelle, was invoked, I was reminded of how far we'd come.

Neither of them were there physically, but you could almost feel their presence as just the mention of their names caused members to rise in applause. We are still proud that America put a black family in "The election of Barack Obama as the first African-American president signaled both pride and hope for many in the black community. In many ways the Obamas softened the lens on black families that have long been thought of as dysfunctional."

the White House, and prouder still that their tenure there was free of scandal and, yes, drama.

But there was an undeniable mix of relief and weariness, too.

For most of his presidency, Obama faced what many would consider a mostly uncooperative Congress.

No one would argue that his presidency was perfect. It certainly had its challenges. Nevertheless, he named two women — Sonia Sotomayor and Elena Kagan — to the Supreme Court. He ended the military's "don't ask, don't tell" policy. He established 23 national monuments and protected public lands. He expanded overtime pay for 4.2 million workers making under $47,476 per year. He gave us Obamacare, providing health care coverage to some 2 million Americans who didn't have insurance.

Those were big moments, but putting partisan politics aside, here's what I especially appreciated about the Obamas.

They softened the lens, if you will, on African-American families who are often seen as dysfunctional.

They were examples of the American dream, bootstrapping and overcoming obstacles, proof that black families can't be reduced to any common denominator.

They were well educated. They worked hard and took care of their children. They were proud of their blackness. They loved each other.

Then last February, the month we set aside to celebrate black history, I was warmed to see on TV a meeting between the president, Michelle Obama and Virginia McLaurin, the 106-year-old retired seamstress at the White House.

"I tell you, I am so happy," she said, looking up at Obama before turning to the first lady. "A black president, yay, and his black wife."

Nearly two years earlier, McLaurin had submitted a petition to the White House asking to meet with the president.

"I've never met a president," she wrote. "I didn't think I would live to see a colored president because I was born in the South and didn't think it would happen."

Few of us did, which brings me back to Watch Night.

Love Henry Whelchel Jr., professor of church history at the Interdenominational Theological Center in Atlanta, told me once that while the African-American Watch Night is a celebration of freedom, it did not begin that way. It started as a night of expectation.

In the early months of the Civil War, President Abraham Lincoln's primary goal was to preserve the Union. On Sept. 22, 1862, Whelchel said, Lincoln threatened that if the Confederacy did not stop fighting and return to the Union by Jan. 1, 1863, he would sign the Emancipation Proclamation.

So on Dec. 31, 1862, black people who could gathered in churches from Boston to South Carolina to await news of the signing.

Sometime around 11:55 p.m., legend has it that in Tremont Temple Baptist Church in Boston --- where many prominent abolitionists were gathered --- a man started running down the aisle. It's coming! he yelled. It's on the wire. It's coming. When the clock struck 12:01, someone shouted, God may not come when you want him, but he's always on time.

Lincoln had signed the Emancipation Proclamation, freeing all slaves in Confederate states.

"That was our jubilee," Whelchel said. "It was a very exciting time."

On this watch night, we celebrated both the start of a new year and the president we never thought we'd ever see. We felt at once grateful and, yes, still excited about what God had done.

And I'd venture to say we felt like dancing much the way Mrs. McLaurin danced when she met the president and his wife back in February.

She hadn't anticipated ever seeing a black president, but here she was dancing with him during his second term in office. That's what I call the substance of things unseen.

Or as Obama might say, the audacity of hope.

MISSIONWEEK 2017 Feb. 5–10, 2017

RACIAL JUSTICE:
Black, White and the Call of the Church

Marquette University invites the public to join us for Mission Week 2017, as we explore racial disparity and injustice through the lens of the Catholic Church, which challenges us to live the Gospel through love, atonement and redemption as we seek to treat each human being with dignity, respect and deep care.

Tuesday, Feb. 7
OPENING KEYNOTE: CONVERSATION WITH BREE NEWSOME AND REV. JIM WALLIS
6 – 7 p.m., Alumni Memorial Union, Monaghan Ballroom

Join Dr. William Welburn, the executive director of the Office of Institutional Diversity and Inclusion, as he facilitates a conversation with Rev. Jim Wallis and Bree Newsome as they discuss the history of racism in America, the legacy of racism in the South and the Gospel call to social action.

Thursday, Feb. 9
CLOSING KEYNOTE: RACIAL JUSTICE: THE CALL OF THE CHURCH, FEATURING REV. BRYAN MASSINGALE, S.T.D.
6 – 7 p.m., Weasler Auditorium

Join Rev. Bryan Massingale, S.T.D., professor of theological and social ethics at Fordham University, a Marquette alumnus, and a priest of the Milwaukee Archdiocese, as he challenges us to live the Gospel call of Christ through honest repentance, atonement, relationship and love. His unique “Call to the Church” is grounded in his identities as a priest, a theologian and as a man who grew up in Milwaukee’s 53206 neighborhood — a community that is one of the poorest in the country and with one of the highest incarceration rates of black men in America.

All events are free and open to all.

RSVP by Tuesday, Jan. 31, to reserve a spot for each of the events. A ticket is required for the Tuesday, Feb. 7, opening keynote.

Thank You, First Lady Michelle Obama

Black women reflect on what FLOTUS means to them

In the words of 37-year-old Nikki F. from Chicago, IL (Mrs. Obama’s hometown), “She represents everything our [Black girls] parents taught us that we could be.”

It's not easy being the first, however. It's harder still to be the first in a role that you wouldn't have chosen for yourself. As the First Lady has stated, “When Barack was talking about running, I was like, are you crazy? I mean, would you just, like, chill out and do something else with your life?” Clearly, the woman was not clamoring for the limelight. Given the choice, she would have lived a fulfilling life tirelessly working to encourage and bring attention to the need for all Americans – especially our youth – to dedicate time to volunteerism and public service.

Thankfully for us, she changed her mind and joined her husband in bringing a “change we can believe in” dream to America. So, in 2009, when her husband was sworn in as the country’s 44th President, we welcomed her with open arms because she presented her authentic self. And because of the connection to her authenticity, we invited her to make us proud; she did not disappoint.

As the first and only (and if we’re being realistic – likely last . . . for a very long time) Black woman to hold this post, Mrs. Obama has exemplified excellence both in words and action. While many love her, there’s a special kinship most Black women feel toward her. It’s not just because she looks like us (although it’s clearly a meaningful fact, according to the survey); it goes so much deeper than that. It’s that she’s made no apologies for the fact that we matter to her. An anomaly in a country where being Black and female has historically meant being discounted, marginalized, and defeated.

As recently as the 2015 Black Women in the United States report, statistics show that the current state of Black American women remain grim:

- Women’s unemployment fell to a six-year low (4.9%) and white women’s unemployment hit a seven-year low (4.2%). Completely counter to that trend, Black women’s unemployment actually ticked up, reaching 8.9%.

- Black women with Bachelor’s degrees, on average, earn about $10,000 less than White men with an Associate’s degree ($49,882 vs. $59,014). In fact, it would take nearly two Black women college graduates to earn what the average White male college graduate earns by himself ($55,804 vs. $100,620).

- In spite of consistently leading all women in labor market participation, Black women are among the most likely in America to be poor. In fact, the poverty rate of Black women (25.1%) more than doubles that of White women (10.3%) and Asian women (11.5%), and slightly eclipses that of Latinas (24.8%).

In the face of harsh statistics and the personal challenges experienced by Black women, is it any wonder that we “beam with pride” for one who encourages her daughters, mentees, and other women of color “not to live by the limited box and definition that we are put in.” Because she knows that expectations for Black girls – whether they grow up on Chicago’s South Side or in a remote village in Nigeria – are limited, Mrs. Obama created initiatives such as "Let Girls Learn" to provide educational opportunities that change lives.

During her tenure, Mrs. Obama has shown a willingness to leveraged her platform of power and influence to make it possible to aim and achieve our potential, which is why we say thank you.

Below are sample voices of Black women sharing the importance of the First Lady to them:

“She represents everything I can be that the world doesn't want me to be.” – Lauren W., 27, New Orleans, LA

“Michelle matters to me because she breaks the stereotypical views of African-American women in not only America but the world! For 8 years, she has held the position of First Lady, while also wearing so many other hats – a mother, a wife, a daughter, a friend, a philanthropist, an educator and so much more. She's held her composure at all times with poise, class and humility. She's addressed issues that most women in her position wouldn't or know how to. It makes me proud to say the First Lady of America is Michelle Obama, an African American woman.” – Anon, 28, Valley Stream, NY

“First Lady Michelle Obama matters to me because she is great role model for me as an African American woman but also just as a person in general. My being young may have something to do with it, but I've never known a First Lady who was so involved issues that are affecting our youth and that inspires me to do more for my community. I also look up to her for her poise and natural confidence. Unlike a lot of celebrities, Michelle Obama provides a healthy and attainable example of what hard work can accomplish.” – Anon, 29

“Michelle Obama matters to me because she has proven to be everything that I expected her to be. She is a woman of stature, grace, beauty, brains and a mother. She has shown that she isn't just a First Lady, she is an everyday woman who we of all ages can look up to and strive to be more like.” – Kimberley T., 29, Bronx, NY

“Because she is the perfect example of a Black woman. We are not only what the media and society portrays (uneducated, loud, ratchet) she is someone that i can point out to my daughter to inspire to one day be.” – Tanaya G., 33, Cleveland, OH

“Michelle Obama matters to me because of her intersections: Black woman, mother, lawyer, advocate, wife. She is also sensitive, outspoken, loving and unafraid to be vulnerable.” – Erica C., 34, Queens, NY

“The First Lady matters to me in so many ways. The strongest strength I draw from her though is her ability to pull through authenticity and genuineness and whatever she does. Often African-American women are put in tough, precarious even soul sucking positions to grow professionally. Watching Mrs. Obama deal with the ridicule while staying true to who she is has taught me so much about how I can also do the same and still feel good about myself.” – Allison R., 34, New York, NY

“Because she gets it. The experience of a Black woman in America. I don't know if anyone with that level of power and access to power in the US has ever understood that experience.” – Rachel H., 34, New York, NY

“The FLOTUS matters to me because I admire her strength in a position where she has constantly been criticized, belittled, and stereotyped. Never, not even for one second, has she stumbled or lost her composure. She has remained the classy, sophisticated, honest, and down to earth woman who stepped onto the campaign trail so many years ago. As we well know, beside every great man is an equally great woman and First Lady Obama has been a shining example of what black excellence looks like. I beam with pride when I see her. She makes me feel like so many things are possible that I once wasn't sure were. She's a hope and a dream set to a smooth beat.” – Shamela B., 36, Tupelo, MS

“Simply put: she represents hope.” – Kimberly T., 39, Indianapolis, IN

“She is a role model that our daughters can actually relate to. My worry is not so much for my peers as it is for our future young leaders. I am the mother to one teenage daughter and aunt to 8 young girls. As Black women we need more than a village to prepare our young women for their futures.” – Elita Celeste H, 41, Bronx, NY

“FLOTUS means a great deal to me because she showed how elegant and sophisticated one can be without coming from a pedigree background. She did it her way! She did not conform to any set of rules or standards but presented a new level of exceptional quality that will be very hard for the next First Lady to achieve. FLOTUS is my SHERO!!” – Alfreda M., 45, Dallas, TX

“Michelle has dispelled the media's portrayal of the Black woman as being uneducated, jobless, hopeless, worthless, baby-mamas that mood off of the government and give birth to criminals and gangster rappers.” – Lee H.

“First Lady Michelle Obama matters to me because she represents all of what any and all African American women can be. She breaks down many stereotypes and proves what can happen when one gets a good education and does not settle for just what one is given; she strives for better. She proves if we as African American women/girls put our minds to it, we can do and be anything we want. She also matters to me because she is not content with her own successes. She does her best to help other be successful as well.” – Katrina

"She defies the stereotype that Black women cannot articulate a thought or plan of action. Her actions are selfless and demonstrate a passionate desire for the children in our nation to have a great future that is limitless.” – Amika K.

It’s a powerful reflection of her legacy to see the many women she’s encouraged and motivated to hope and work for a better future for themselves and the teens and girls coming behind them. So, thank you, Mrs. Obama, for connecting with us in a way that no other First Lady ever has before (or likely ever will).
