The McClure twins

Black millennial moms and the pressures of raising picture-perfect tots

By Victoria Graham, article courtesy of thegrio.com posted on March 2, 2017

By now, almost everyone has heard of the adorable McClure twins, the identical twin sisters who captured our hearts about three months ago in a viral video.

The adorable girls are in matching outfits down to their Banku knot hairstyles as they react to the shocking revelation that while they were born on the same day, one is, naturally, older than the other.

Fast forward to TV appearances, endorsement deals, and hundreds of thousands subscribers and followers later — the McClure twins are what social media dreams are made of.

The McClure twins, whose public accounts are run exclusively by their parents, are a part of a growing new trend of parents positioning their children for social viewing and/or promotion.

Prior to social media, parents who wanted to promote their child's likeness had to work with modeling agencies to negotiate and ultimately book print or TV opportunities. Naturally, this process limits the pool of available children, especially children of color, who are willing to endure this lengthy and expensive process.

YouTube was among the first platforms to really challenge the conventional path to stardom. Now anyone around the world could create a channel and audience. Yet, YouTube does have its limitations.

Crafting a YouTube video worth public consumption takes time. From ideation and execution of filming to edits, the process could take days or even weeks.

Also, the path to going viral is much harder on a platform like YouTube because it is clustered with movies, music videos, educational tools, and thousands of channels on topics from children's games to cooking, to DIY projects. While opportunities widened under YouTube, there were still barriers that kept more novice parents from utilizing the tool for social promotion.

This all changed when Instagram was created in the fall of 2010. Instagram's simple interface, few restrictions, and emphasis on still shots made it the perfect platform for self-promotion. Now those same novice social media users who would not have thought of creating a YouTube channel, or attending a casting call, jumped at the opportunity to join Instagram.

Turn to Instagram now, and there thousands, if not millions, of pages dedicated to promoting aspiring child models, actors, athletes, etc.

All are managed by their parents, who carefully craft pictures and portraits, with just the right amount of candid shots to tell a story of a happy and thriving child. The desire to become Instafamous reaches all the way to newborn babies.

The rise of the momager (and dadager) is real.

Yet, much like every other social media platform, Instagram doesn't get the benefit of escaping the ills of mainstream culture. Facebook is currently combating fake news, Twitter has bullies, Snapchat increases risky behavior, and Instagram perpetuates dominant mainstream standards of beauty and reinforces narrowly defined cultural norms.

As cute as the McClure twins are, they benefit from colorism and natural hair bias. Scroll a few popular children's hashtags on Instagram, and themes quickly start to emerge about the 'type' of black kids that receive the most likes.

They are often light to medium brown skin with 3C or 4A curly hair patterns. In fact, there are entire Instagram pages and hashtags dedicated to biracial kids, often with one of the races being black. Searches for the top Insta-kids often yield black kids that fit the aforementioned depictions.

The selective appropriation of what is desirable within and outside the Instagram community can have a major impact on the actual kids in the pictures and the parents who manage their pages and lives off of social media.

Aside from offering flawed perceptions of reality, kids are starting to connect self-worth with their social media likeness. The more likes they receive, the more favorable they view themselves and their abilities.

Parents who create social media accounts for their babies and young kids could, if not communicated, be speeding up the process of connecting likes with self-esteem and monetary value.

Parents must be able to separate, and at appropriate ages, explain to their children the many layers of social media from casual user to brand influencer and everything in between.

Children are not the only ones affected by all the likes and double taps. Increasingly parents are feeling more conscious and subconscious pressure to present themselves in 'picture perfect' fashion. New moms are especially prone to social media anxiety.

It's not hard to see why. Instagram generally only presents the best of a moment, event, person, or family. Blowout diapers, tantrums in grocery stores, and working 12-hour shifts are typically not Instagram's top trending photos. Yet, that is the reality many parents face on a daily basis.

For black parents, especially those of the woke variety, there may actually be even more pressure to prove your "Black is Beautiful." The desire to provide adequate social media representation must be balanced with proper expectations of your audience or followers' behaviors.

Even casual social media users must navigate in a world where the Joneses are not a neighborhood or local community, but an entire global network — virtually connected through statuses, pictures, and 140 characters.

There is nothing wrong with social promotion, social media entrepreneurship, or even positioning your children or yourself to earn money for their likeness. America perfected capitalism for a reason.

However, for every #melaninkids post or picture you see, double tap, or scroll past, there are real and implied implications and assumptions being made about the content and yourself.

‘A Day Without a Woman’ strike puts some parents in bind amid school closures

By thegrio I posted March 8

AUTHOR AND ILLUSTRATOR, WINTRELL PITTMAN, RELEASES THE FIRST OF 10 BOOKS IN HIS "CHILDREN OF THE WORLD" SERIES

Nationwide (BlackNew.com) -- Wintrell Pittman has published the first book in his series called Children of the World. Mr. Pittman is the author, illustrator and C.E.O. of W.R.P.'S Publications (2017).

The Children of the World logo is a likeness of the world being held up by different colored hands.

Per Mr. Pittman the different colored hands represent the various races and peoples of the world.

The meaning of the logo is that it takes all the people of the world to support the world to make it a loving and peaceful planet.

Each book has a colorful and friendly crayon character who has a situation or personality that needs some correction. Book one is entitled Little Girl Yellow. Little Girl Yellow was sad and mellow because she wanted a yellow umbrella; but instead her parents bought her a red one. In the end, Little Girl Yellow ends up being grateful to her parents for the red umbrella.

The Children of the World series teaches children (and some adults) some very important life lessons without the endorsing any religion. This means it should not be a hard sell to get into the school system and other governmental places of education. The Children of

While the “A Day Without a Woman” strike has been applauded by many as a feminist statement, it has one drawback that many women are criticizing: school closures are putting parents in a bind as to what to do with their children.

While many school districts closed to allow teachers and staff to participate in the strike, some of the closures were last minute. For example, Prince George’s County Public Schools in Maryland didn’t tell parents about the closures until Tuesday night.

“This is absolutely infuriating and uncalled for. Who gets punished here? The students. Especially those students who rely on the schools for food during the day. And never mind the fact that you’ve inconvenienced parents who now have to scramble for daycare at the last possible minute,” one person said on the district’s Facebook’s page.

Similarly, one person wrote on Alexandria City Public Schools’s Facebook page, “This last-minute decision does a disservice to anyone in a family where both parents work full-time. What does ACPS expect those families to do about child care with such little notice? It also does a disservice to working women outside of ACPS, who now may be forced to stay home with their children.”

The complaints are part of a broader problem that the strike has faced, with many complaining of elitism, as only those who can afford to participate can do so.

However, others felt that the inconvenience was the whole point of the strike.

“Way to go Teachers! The whole point is to make people realize what an inconvenience it is when Women don’t show up. You are doing a brave and great thing. Thank you. (From a parent who is facing said inconvenience!)” said a parent on the Facebook page of Chapel Hill-Carrboro City Schools in North Carolina

“While many school districts closed to allow teachers and staff to participate in the strike, some of the closures were last minute. For example, Prince George’s County Public Schools in Maryland didn’t tell parents about the closures until Tuesday night.”

MILWAUKEE PUBLIC LIBRARY ENTERS INTO HISTORIC PARTNERSHIP WITH MPS TO GIVE 65,000 STUDENTS DIGITAL LIBRARY CARDS

LibraryNow offers complete digital access to MPL resources to every MPS student

During his annual State of the City address this morning, Milwaukee Mayor Tom Barrett announced that the Milwaukee Public Library (MPL) and Milwaukee Public Schools (MPS) have entered into an historic partnership to provide complete, free digital access to all the library's online resources to every student in the district.

LibraryNow, as the program is called, gives every MPS student from 1st -12th grade access to online tutoring help, book and music downloads, magazines, games, research databases and more, simply through using their MPS student ID number.

LibraryNow gives students access to the full array of online resources offered by MPL wherever they are – in school, at home, on tablets, phones, laptops or desktop computers.

LibraryNow also allows students to log on and use computers at all library branch locations.

"We are focused on strengthening the connection between library resources and our city residents through a myriad of ways," said Milwaukee Public Library Director Paula Kiely.

"By expanding educational and entertainment programming, offering a Fine Forgiveness campaign, and increasing hours at a number of neighborhood branch locations, we have been able to bring more residents into the library to read, learn and connect – to each other and our resources.

LibraryNow will expand learning opportunities for MPS students through help with schoolwork and skill development, ultimately providing life-long benefits."

Students can access LibraryNow through the MPS student portal or by visiting LibraryNow.org.

The program was developed by Milwaukee Public Library, Milwaukee Public Schools, and Mayor Tom Barrett's office in concert with a 2016 White House initiative called "ConnectED," which strives to bring community leaders together around a shared educational goal of improving education outcomes for children around the nation through increased use of digital resources.

Students are encouraged to visit their local neighborhood branch of Milwaukee Public Library to upgrade to a full access card which allows them to check out materials.

For students who have had their previous cards blocked due to fines or fees, library staff will be available to restore access.

"Public libraries are one of our city's greatest treasures," said Mayor Tom Barrett. "That is why we have made significant investment in our neighborhood branches.

The library is a place that enhances early literacy, assists with school work, provides job training, and much more. LibraryNow brings so much of the value of our system right to students wherever they are, and will have a lasting impact on our students."
