If you still haven’t heard of billionaire Robert F. Smith, it’s time to start paying attention.

The Chairman and CEO of Vista Equity Partners has lived his life mostly under the radar, granting limited interviews about how he’s built a private equity empire and net worth of $2.5 billion.

Although the 54-year-old Smith has kept his life and work mostly behind the scenes, his business moves to support the black community are hard to ignore.

Smith grew up in the era of segregation and was a product of school bussing. While still in high school, he had a knack for computing and called the offices of Bell Labs to ask for a summer internship normally reserved for upperclassmen. They said “No.”

So he continued to call them weekly for five months. Despite being repeatedly turned away and eventually ignored altogether, one day he finally got an offer after an older student didn’t show up.

Smith would go on to earn a chemical engineering degree from Cornell University. Lesson? Smith knew his stuff. And when it was time to ask for a seat at the table, he could deliver based on his merits and persistence.

After graduating from Columbia Business School with honors in 1984, Smith landed a coveted job at Goldman Sachs, focusing on technology mergers and acquisitions. He successfully led these efforts for six years but eventually wanted to venture out on his own. Smith recalls feeling like no private equity firms would look at him as a desirable candidate.

In 2000, Smith took a leap of faith to start his own private equity firm focused on software and technology-enabled businesses. The fact that Smith, a double Ivy-League graduate with a masters degree in business, felt he could run into roadblocks shows that even when you are qualified, realizing your unique vision might mean creating your own path.

As of last year, Smith’s company managed more than $26 billion dollars in assets and is considered to be one of the top private equity firms in the country.

1. Be an expert at your craft.

“Most important thing you can do as a young person is to become an expert. There is no substitute for becoming the best at your craft.”

2. Create your own.

“I started Vista because I knew no private equity firm would hire me. I saw what they were looking for… So I created my own firm.”

3. Be an example to others.

“I now have the ability to inspire some young African-Americans to say, ‘I can now do this.’”

4. Realize your unique vision.

“People were looking for… So I created my own firm.”

5. Create your own path.

“The fact that Smith, a double Ivy-League graduate with a masters degree in business, felt he could run into roadblocks shows that even when you are qualified, realizing your unique vision might mean creating your own path.”

Smith writes in an article for Ebony magazine about black business leaders. The fact that Smith, a double Ivy-League graduate with a masters degree in business, felt he could run into roadblocks shows that even when you are qualified, realizing your unique vision might mean creating your own path.

Serena Williams joins board to help bring diversity to Silicon Valley

Article courtesy of thegrio.com

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Tennis star Serena Williams has 39 Grand Slam titles, four Olympic medals, major endorsement deals and her own line of clothing and accessories. Now she is embarking on a new mission: She says she wants to help tech companies diversify their workforces and solve one of the industry's most vexing problems.

Williams, 35, will get her chance as she joins a Silicon Valley boardroom. Online poll-taking service SurveyMonkey announced Williams' appointment to its board on Wednesday, along with Intuit CEO Brad Smith.

"I feel like diversity is something I speak to," Williams said in an interview with The Associated Press. "Change is always happening; change is always building. What is important to me is to be at the forefront of the change and to make it easier for the next person that comes behind me."

Williams didn't offer specifics about her goals as a corporate director. She says she wants to help tech companies diversify their workforces and solve one of the industry's most vexing problems.

Robert F. Smith’s 5 keys for success

"Maybe [the highest and best use is] for you to read to a child daily," he said. Asking yourself which of your talents and gifts in- spire you to get up in the morning is time well-spent. 5. Invest in the future. “People have put barriers to us for hundreds of years and been thoughtful about it… So we need to be thoughtful.” New developments in technology have been com- pared to the “fourth industrial revolution.” But Smith insists there is a lot at stake if black people miss out on the current boom in STEM. “These are the on-ramps in our community. The greatest wealth building opportunity in the history of the planet,” Smith remarked. “How do we get a part of that wealth? I guarantee it’s through technology.” Smith says in the same way that football scouts start early in finding young athletic talent in elementary school, black communities should invest resources in uplifting our own young tech stars. “It’s intellectual property resources that you have unique dominion over,” says Smith. “There is a system that has been developed, that we have to develop in technology. Then what happens is, leaders will emerge.”
