GIVING BLACK CHEFS CREDIT WHERE IT'S DUE

How Leah Chase and Rudy Lombard created the framework to celebrate Creole food by John T. Edge, article courtesy of Cuisine Noir, Posted May 15, 2017

In the early 1970s, as black farmers tried to earn a living while holding on to their land, black restaurateurs leveraged the new soul food chic that ranged from Harlem, where diners at the Red Rooster washed down chitlins with Champagne, to Atlanta, where Rev. Willie James Stafford of the Free For All Missionary Baptist Church (who favored maroon jumpsuits and packed a revolver), opened Soul on Top of Peachtree atop a down-town skyscraper.

"I'm giving the people pleasure and I'm creating jobs for them," he said in 1972, explaining what it meant to claim a perch on top of Peachtree Street, "and I'm throwing the money right back in the Black community."

Black restaurants served black customers as clubhouses. Leah Chase built the reputation of her husband's family restaurant by serving her New Orleans neighbors and courting political and civil rights figures. Early in her career Chase managed boxers. Later, her dining room was a gathering place for black progressives and musicians.

Ray Charles ate gumbo at Dooky Chase's and cut a song to make clear his devotion. Lena Horne came for fried chicken. Sara Vaughan ate stuffed crabs. Breaking the color line, playwright Tennessee Williams taxied down Orleans Avenue to eat lemon icebox pie.

Constance Baker Motley, the attorney who represented James Meredith in his federal appeal to gain admission to the University of Mississippi, arrived before court to eat breakfast.

When union organizer Jim Dombrowski, a founder of the Highlander Folk School, met with Godchaux Sugar Company employees, he claimed the upstairs at Dooky's.

Before retiring to a friend's home to eat crawfish or boiled crabs on newspapers, spread on the hardwood floor, Thurgood Marshall, the eventual Supreme Court justice, swung by Dooky's for gumbo.

Chase recognized that neither her famous customers nor the black chefs who worked in restaurants across New Orleans saw value in traditional dishes like fried chicken.

"I don't think they realized their worth because they never put emphasis on anything they had," Chase said, speaking of the intricate Creole dish gumbo z'herbes and of the women who were expert at cooking it.

"They never thought it was good enough. They never thought it was something to make over. I "t was just what we do. Like the ladies who sew, the men who do the carpenter work, just what we do you know. They didn't put any value on themselves or on their work."

By the mid-1970s, Rudy Lombard, who led the desegregation of New Orleans restaurants in the 1960s, recognized that, if black workers were going to see value in their labor, new frames for that work had to be constructed.

He reached this realization in the midst of the Black Arts Movement of the late 1960s and early 1970s, which the critic Houston Baker described as an "attempt to construct a chrysalis of blackness." That cloak, he said, might allow artists to "grasp the essence of the black American's reality."

Published in 1978, the year after New Orleans elected Ernest "Dutch" Morial the first black mayor of the city, Creole Feast was a political manifesto, masquerading as a cookbook, draped in a black chrysalis.

"Black involvement in the New Orleans Creole cuisine is as old as gumbo and just as important," Lombard wrote.

"French, Spanish, Cajun, Italian—all these ethnic groups live in New Orleans, but they are not running the best kitchens of the best restaurants of the city. The single, lasting characteristic of Creole cuisine is the Black element."

Too many writers ascribed a "secondary, lowly, or non-existent role to the Black hand in the pot," Lombard explained.

Too few recognized that New Orleans culture, food, music, architecture, ceremony, and belief were based on African knowledge and traditions.

If the chefs who ran the kitchens at Antoine's and Galatoire's were not going to get the pay they deserved from employers or the accolades they deserved from customers, Lombard aimed to canonize them himself.

To make his case, Lombard interviewed fifteen black chefs including Nathaniel Burton, with whom he partnered on the recipes. (Toni Morrison, who had already written The Bluest Eye but was still working at Random House, served as editor.) Lombard gave the chefs voice and space to share the lessons they learned in city kitchens.

Leah Chase held forth on how to avoid a gravy that roped on the heat. Austin Leslie of Chez Hélène talked through how to cut up a chicken into twelve pieces instead of the customary ten.

Sherman Crayton, who began cooking at Arnaud's in 1936, confirmed Lombard's argument that the problems of Creole food were rooted in attribution: "They say it is a mixture of Spanish and French, but the only people who seem to know all about it are neither Spanish nor French, they're Blacks."

Lombard worked to frame the lives of these chefs in a way that bestowed honor. He accomplished that with a subtitle, 15 Master Chefs of New Orleans Reveal Their Secrets.

Jacques Pépin, the celebrated French-born chef, made the arguments advanced by Crayton and Lombard when he told his biographer that, on arrival in the United States in 1959, he was most impressed by the old guard African American chefs he met, the men and women who worked in the grand hotels and fine dining rooms.

He thought they had the same gravitas, the same experience-honed talent that Frenchmen exhibited.

Pépin expected those black men to emerge as the stars, and was surprised when they did not ascend to the firmament during the American culinary renaissance of the late twentieth century.

He didn't understand why they failed to get their due. As the years advanced and Southern food gentrified, his question would linger in the air, nagging and unresolved.

Dr. Jasmine Streeter explains how to avoid costly veterinary bills this holiday season

Top 10 Holiday Foods to Avoid Feeding Your Pet

Dr. Jasmine Streeter, DVM, courtesy of the Portland Skanner

It is officially the season of feasting. With Thanksgiving leftovers tucked in the fridge and Christmas cookies baking in the oven, you and your pet are probably being tempted with all types of aromas. There are many holiday dishes that families enjoy during this time of year. Sometimes we are tempted to share these meals with our pets. This month's focus is on keeping your pet healthy and happy by avoiding these toxic foods and beverages.

Poultry Skin: Turkey, duck, chicken and geese are one of the hallmark dishes served for many families around the country. Their cooked skin is usually covered with delicious seasonings, oils and fats, making them toxic to your pet. Pets that ingest these skins are at risk of developing a life-threatening illness resulting in inflammation of the pancreas (pancreatitis). Severe vomiting and diarrhea may also be observed.

Drippings and Gravy: The drippings of meats are often used to make gravy. The gravy contains all the seasonings and even more fat than the skin of the meat itself. These foods may also cause pancreatitis, vomiting and diarrhea.

Cooked Ham, Poultry and Steak Bones: These bones may be a favorite of your pet. Did you know that they are dangerous when ingested? When consumed, they can break and splinter into sharp points that cause tears in the intestine or a foreign body obstruction.

Dough: Bread, cake, cookie and muffin dough often contain leavening agents that make ingestion harmful to your pets. When eaten, the dough expands in the stomach causing pain and producing toxic ethanol from fermentation.

Alcohol: This substance should never be shared with your pet. Alcohol or ethanol is metabolized differently in dogs and cats than in humans. Ingestion of this substance can lead to difficulty breathing, seizures, vomiting or death.

Onions and Garlic: These two commonly used seasonings can cause red blood cell damage in your pet leading to anemia and sometimes the production of red or brown urine (hemoglobinuria). Other similar vegetables of the genus Allium (e.g., chives, leeks, and scallions) are also toxic and should be avoided.

Raisins and Grapes: These fruits of the genus Vitis can lead to acute kidney failure and death when ingested by dogs and cats.

Macadamia Nuts: These delicious nuts have been shown to cause hind limb weakness (paresis) and abnormal gait (ataxia) when ingested in large quantities.

Chocolate: This sweet treat contains caffeine and theobromine which are toxic to your pet. The darker the chocolate (e.g., bakers or dark chocolate) the more harmful it will be to your furry family member.

Corn on the Cob, Twine, and Toothpicks: These are commonly stolen items from leftover dinner plates when ingested can lead to foreign body obstruction or vomiting.

This season should be spent creating memories of love and joy. Hopefully, by following this guide, you will avoid costly veterinary bills and save money. Wishing you a Merry Christmas, Happy Kwanzaa, and a Happy New Year!

Let's Eat Books Soul Food Advisor by Cassandra Harrell

The fall season is the perfect time to experiment with recipes, especially comfort dishes from the South. If you're a book junkie, you have probably come across hundreds of books with a focus on "authentic Southern cooking."

We found a keeper by author Cassandra Harrell that we can't seem to put down.

With "Soul Food Advisor," Harrell teases home cooks and foodies with 150 recipes inspired by her childhood food memories.

The former award-winning caterer holds nothing back as she celebrates soul food with iconic dishes and irresistible flavors.

The subtitle of the book is "Recipes and Tips for Authentic Southern Cooking," and Harrell certainly delivers on this.

She writes that her ancestors hail from Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri who passed down original recipes that were reflective of the foods in those regions.

Like most, Harrell grew up listening to the food stories from her mother and watching Big Mama fry hot-water corn bread which inspired her culinary dreams.

A native of Tennessee, Harrell started her catering business in 1994 in Milwaukee, WI with her husband Earl who is a renowned barbecue chef.

Together they owned Earl's Southern Bar-B-Que along with Earl's Southern Catering that specialized in southern cuisine. They cooked and catered for the NBA's Milwaukee Bucks as well as sporting events and national trade shows.

With years and years of experience behind her, Harrell writes "Soul Food Advisor" to share more than just recipes. It also offers culinary history with insight into the ongoing debate of what is soul food.

You'll have to get a copy to read what she says is the difference between soul food and southern food because we can't get the entire book away.

Now to the good stuff. This book will be a kitchen staple as it has so many great recipes that you'll want to try and cook often. In addition, you'll be able to hone in on your barbecue skills with several recipes by Harrell's husband.

As you flip through the pages, your mouth is sure to water as your mind spins trying to figure out

Chef Ace Champion's Good Food Revolution

by Ruksana Hussain, courtesy of Cuisine Noir

If the name hasn't already piqued your interest, how about the fact that this is a chef who is legally 100 percent blind in his right eye?

Not only did chef Ace Champion successfully overcome a life changing experience, he blazed a trail all his own along the way. This is a man on a mission, preaching and practicing a healthy food revolution, and he's taking you on this journey.

The author of "8 Steps to a Perfect Meal," Champion puts forth concepts such as visualization and presentation in a step-by-step methodical manner through his self-help cookbook, interspersed with stories from his own life.

As his inspiration, he attributes the book "The Secret" and applying some of the principles he learned not to just his lifestyle but also his style of instruction.

"I figured if I produced a cookbook then who would know me from the thousands of cookbooks already out there from hundreds of different celebrities. When I did my research, I found that there is nothing out there that specifies the proper cooking equipment that you need or the techniques. With this book, I am on a mission to actually teach people how to cook," Champion says.

Part of that teaching includes local universities and wineries in Wisconsin, home for more than a decade now for this Louisiana transplant who decided to bring his Cajun-Creole cooking to the land of cheese curds. But that's not all - Champion has two businesses and about eight different roles he fulfills as an entrepreneur.

At Chef Champion LLC, he is a private chef, private and public cooking class instructor, visionary and motivational speaker. At Champions Production LLC, his television show business, he is president, host, writer and executive producer of the "Cook Like A Champion" TV series.

The majority of this entrepreneurial momentum occurred in the last five years, after Champion graduated from culinary arts school, with honors, in 2012. By his own admission, it was the hardest thing he ever did.

At age 33, he was not technically savvy and had to take on subjects he knew nothing about. The struggle was real but he persisted.

Upon graduation, Champion began appearing on local television channels but decided to pursue the larger television networks to help grow his show. His website has a running list of all the channels his show airs on locally and globally. As of this interview, he was wrapping up shooting three more episodes for season three.

Pork Chops and Cabbage with Cider Gravy

Recipe by Better Homes and Garden via Cuisine Noir.com

INGREDIENTS

4 pork chops, cut 1/2 inch thick (1-1/4 pounds total)
Nonstick cooking spray
1/2 medium head cabbage, shredded (3 cups)
1 medium carrot, coarsely chopped (1/2 cup)
1 medium onion, cut into wedges (3/4 cup)
1-1/4 cups apple cider or apple juice
1 tablespoon cider vinegar
2 to 3 teaspoons prepared horseradish
1 medium red or green apple, cored and sliced

(1 cup)
1 tablespoon cornstarch
1 teaspoon instant beef bouillon granules
1/4 teaspoon black pepper

PREPARATION

Trim fat from meat. Spray an unheated, large skillet with nonstick spray. In the skillet brown chops over medium heat about 4 minutes on each side.

Add cabbage, carrot, onion, 1 cup of the apple cider or juice, vinegar, and horseradish.

Bring to boiling; reduce heat. Cover and simmer mixture for 7 to 8 minutes or until pork is done (160 degrees F) and cabbage is crisp-tender.

Add red or green apple; cook for 2 to 3 minutes more.

Transfer the chops and vegetables to a platter, reserving the liquid in the skillet; keep warm.

For gravy, stir together the remaining 1/4 cup apple cider, cornstarch, bouillon granules, and pepper. Stir into liquid in skillet.

Cook and stir until thickened and bubbly.

Cook and stir for 2 minutes more.

Serve with the pork chops and the vegetables.

Makes 4 servings.

Make-Ahead Tip: Shred

cabbage and cut up carrot; refrigerate in plastic storage bags or containers up to 12 hours ahead.

ELECTION WATCH 2016
THE RESULTS

Senate incumbent Taylor defeats challenger Barnes in hotly contested primary race

Jason Fields to return to Assembly, Gwen Moore easily defeats challenger Gary George

Compiled by MCJ Staff

Incumbent state Sen. Lena Taylor handily won the most hotly anticipated, contested and discussed political race of the year, defeating her challenger, Rep. Mandela Barnes in the August 9 state primary elections.

Taylor collected 61 percent (11,430) of the votes in her fourth district senatorial race. Despite heavy financial backing and support from the predominantly white suburb of Shorewood—and the political action group, Wisconsin Working Family Party, Barnes could only muster 39 percent (7,414) of the votes.

In what could best be described as the second most hotly contested political race in the community, incumbent Milwaukee County District Attorney John Chisholm defeated Atty. Yvonne Swangilan. Chisholm received 51,446 votes (65 percent) to Swangilan's 27,570 votes (35 percent).

Described by local WNDV radio talk show host Sherwin Hughes as "a Phoenix rising from the ashes," former State Rep. Jason Fields reclaimed his former District 1 Assembly seat, narrowly defeating Darrell Gibson.

Fields collected 2,930 votes (59 percent) to Gibson's 2,062 (41 percent).

If there were ever a proverbial "cack-a-walk," it would be the contest between incumbent U.S. Congresswoman Gwen Moore and former state Senator Gary George.

Figuratively speaking (and expectedly), Moore walked all over George in this primary election, receiving 85 percent of the votes (55,093) to George's poultry 15 percent (6,508 votes).

In the other senate race involving our community, Rep. LaTonya Johnson will succeed Nikiya Harris Dodd in senate district six, who stepped down from the position for personal reasons.

Johnson defeated two other challengers for the seat Thomas Harris and Michael Bonds, the former president of the Milwaukee Public School's Board of Directors.

Johnson collected 9,500 votes (61 percent). The race for second place between Harris and Bonds was tight, with Harris receiving 3,258 votes (20 percent), and Bonds 3,011 (15 percent).

In two other Assembly races in predominately Black districts, incumbent state Rep. Leon Young retained his District 16 seat defeating Edgar Lin, Brandy Band, and Stephen Janzer.

David Crowley will now represent the 17th Assembly district, defeating two other candidates, Kim Burns—the daughter of the late legendary lawmaker Polly Williams—and Marcus Hart.
