BREWERS AND BUILD-A-BEAR WORKSHOP TEAM UP WITH THE MIRACLE

LEAGUE OF MILWAUKEE

Milwaukee Brewers officials (shown above holding teddy bears), Cecelia Gore (executive director of the Brewers Community Foundation) and Katina Shaw (senior director, community relations and family liaison) were with seven Milwaukee Brewers players and 25 children from the Miracle League of Milwaukee recently to create their own furry friends from Build-A-Bear Workshop.

The special event was held at The Journeyman Hotel, 310 E. Chicago St. The players who participated in the bear construction were: Jacob Barnes, Keon Broxton, Josh Hader, Jeremy Jeffrees, Brett Phillips, Travis Shaw, and Eric Sogard.

Children dressed their personalized bear in baseball apparel and took part in the "heart ceremony" and birth certificate distribution. Following the build, the players had lunch with the kids and their parents.

The event was a "Beyond the Diamond" initiative funded by Brewers Community Foundation. The Miracle League believes everyone deserves a chance to play baseball. The league allows all children to play organized baseball, regardless of ability. Kids with special needs dress in uniforms, make plays in the field and round the bases just like their peers in standard little leagues. —Photos by Yvonne Kemp

Girls Just Wanna Have Guns: Concealed carry permits rising among women

Article courtesy of ABC - Palm Springs via "The Rundown"

The number of people with concealed weapon permits is growing in Riverside County, particularly among women.

After moving to Riverside County about two years ago, Dezarae Payne has been helping those like her get comfortable with firearms.

"It's my passion because I'm a female," Payne said. "When I came here, I saw in California they didn't have as many freedoms as we had where I came from. I wanted other women to have the same freedoms."

As a member of the NRA Members' Councils of California, she travels to the Riverside County Sheriff's Department's Ben Clark Training Center and all around the state teaching "Women on Target."

A firearms course taught by women for women.

"We come in here [and] we do a mini basic pistol class," Payne said. "It's very, very basic, and then the women will get to go out and shoot as much as they want to."

In the last two years, she's seen her numbers go up.

"They started going, I think probably 10 women, or went as small as five," Payne said. "Now, we capped it at 30. It's a nice comfortable number. But within two weeks, the thing is full, sometimes days."

Babysitting Can Help Girls from Becoming Victims

Young women and teen girls have always had it tough and the recent Hollywood scandals illustrate the types of problems women have had to face not only in entertainment but in many other industries as well. There is however a long-time activity that can help young women from becoming a victim and that's babysitting.

Most people may dismiss babysitting as just a part-time job for a teen to make a few dollars but with the proper training and experience, a young woman can develop her confidence, a higher level of responsibility, leadership and life-skills that she will use for the rest of her life.

Being a babysitter is more than just putting the kids in front of the television and then to bed. A babysitter is responsible for the safety and well-being of another human being.

It looks simple because in most cases, nothing goes wrong. The importance of having a properly trained babysitter is evident when something does go wrong.

There are hundreds of babysitting courses available across the country.

They teach how to properly handle, feed and change babies, how to deal with toddlers and many other situations that can pop up. Many babysitting programs also offer emergency first-aid and CPR courses that could help save a kid's life.

Just like anti-bullying programs, all the speeches, skits and cheers that kids are exposed to are useless unless that person develops their confidence and has a high level of self-esteem. In most cases, victims have the opposite. The majority of people who complete a babysitting course and learn first-aid and CPR do develop a sense of empowerment.

Knowing what to do in the event of an emergency is empowering. Knowing that you can help save someone's life helps build confidence and although they may not realize it, learning first-aid and CPR also builds and develops their leadership abilities.

A young woman with these skills is less likely to be a victim.

For parents, having someone watch their kids so that they can leave their home is like having a mini vacation. For many others, a babysitter is needed so that they can go to work to earn money to pay their bills. As long as there are kids, there will always be a need for babysitters. A few of the skills that being a babysitter can develop include:

Communication Skills:

It is extremely important that the babysitter is able to understand and communicate clearly with the adults as to what needs to be done when they are gone. She must be able to ask questions before the adults leave and must also be able to explain to the parents if they are not able or comfortable with something they've been asked to do.

It is also important for her to clearly explain any situations or events that have happened while they were gone. It could be something as simple as an appliance not working or even noticing the kid developing a rash. Parents need to know.

It is also just as important for the babysitter to communicate with the kids as well. Just barking orders won't work but being confident in giving them directions will. Kids will ideally be more cooperative if they feel like they can talk to her.

Organizational Skills:

A reliable babysitter is organized, prepared and on time.

Prior to the job, the babysitter must have everything they need for the time they are there. That may include a change of clothes, a fully charged cell phone and a way to get there on time and a way to get home safely afterwards.

The parents may also have a number of tasks for the babysitter to do while they're gone so it's important to be able to do them properly especially when it involves something important such as giving medication. Being organized is important for a successful babysitter. Responsibility:

For some teens, this is the first time that they are really in charge of something important.

First and foremost, they are responsible for the safety of the kids. The tasks assigned to them by the adults are not always suggestions and must be completed to the best of their abilities. The babysitter must also be responsible enough to tell the parents that they are not confident or even able to do something they are asked to do. It's important for the something they are asked to do. It's important for the babysitter to be honest with the parents and to themselves about her abilities. The babysitter must also check on the kids regularly even after she puts them to bed and be there to help them if they get up in the middle of the night. It may be boring to be sitting in front of the television but a responsible babysitter knows that they are always "on duty" even when the kids are asleep.

Problem Solving:

You hope that everything goes smoothly but as parents know, it's not always the case. Unexpected things happen and a babysitter must be able to adapt and solve problems as they come up.

She must be able to understand the situation, come up with a solution, implement it and hope that the problem is resolved which may not always happen.

Being able to find solutions to problems now may help her to solve larger issues in the future as an adult.

Confidence:

Confidence is a skill that is developed over time and as a babysitter, she must be responsible, be organized, solve problems and be able to communicate. Having these skills and using them will help her to build confidence in herself and increase her self-esteem which will help her throughout her life.

Not every decision she makes will work out and not every decision she makes may be the right one for her at that time but at least she was confident enough to make that decision. Deciding about what is good for her will come with time, maturity and experience.

Kids with confidence are less likely to be bullied and are more likely to succeed at what they do. Young women who have developed a high level of self-esteem are less likely to become a victim of predators as well.

There are many other skills that a babysitter can learn but the most important skills they can learn are the ones that will make them a better person as they get older so when you do hire a young woman to look after your kids, remember, you're not just giving them a job to look after your kids, you're also helping them to become better prepared for life.

The Black Lives Matter Global Network Dedicates 4th Black Futures Month to legendary movement activist Erica Garner

BLM to collaborate with Black Feminist Future and Black Millennial tech hub, Blavity, to bring cultural works to the public throughout the month of February

Washington, D.C. --Black Lives Matter Global Network will dedicate 2018 Black Futures Month to the legacy of activist Erica Garner in the wake of her untimely death late last year, and the future of Black life.

The announcement comes as the organization launched their fourth installment of Black Futures Month, which was created to help the world celebrate Black joy and splendor with a focus on imagining the possibilities of a joyful, free and liberated future for all Black people.

"We've dedicated this Black Futures Month to the legacy of Erica Garner and the future of Black life. Erica's untimely death and stark examples of our mortality -- including Serena Williams' postnatal experience to the rash of murders of trans Black women and lesbians -- makes this month's celebration critically important," said Patrisse Khan-Cullors, co-founder of Black Lives Matter Global Network and New York Times bestselling author.

"We're exploring what Black feminist futures could look like and are bringing together artists and poets from around the world to bring that vision to life.

"We're thrilled to work with Blavity to lift up Erica's beautiful life and to imagine ourselves into the future, a radical act of love that ensures the legacy of Black feminism."

Each week in February, artist pairs will share a written + visual artistic contribution. Additionally, Black Lives Matter will join Black Feminist Future to host an hour-long conversation on Twitter on the week's art pieces, Black art and movement, and what a Black feminist future could look like.

Black Futures month will feature Black feminist poets like Amir Sulaiman, Aja Monet, and Junauda Petrus, who have created incredible work to help inspire the Movement for Black Lives and beyond this year.
