Dr. King's loss felt even more in today's very troubled times

By Richard G. Carter

"Good ideas are not immortal. They die, just like men..."

—Burgess Meredith, "The Man" (1972)

With all the bad things going on in the world today -- including deranged shooters killing school kids and adults, terrorist attacks running rampant and a boisterous bully in the White House -- it is sadly ironic that 50 years today, the greatest man of the 20th century unjustly lost his life. The king was dead. Long live the king.

It was April 4, 1968, when the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. fell victim to a sniper bullet on a balcony at the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tenn. And like others slaughtered by sickos using powerful, high-tech weapons, Dr. King was an innocent victim.

To me, it seems like only yesterday. And there is no relief, or respite today, when remembering Dr. King's death, at 39, in the Old South city where he'd gone to lend his considerable presence on behalf of striking, mostly Black, sanitation workers.

And, as if by some bad karma, Dr. King predicted his own death in church the night before in his memorable "I've been to the mountaintop speech." How very, very sad.

I still choke-up when I see the striking photo of the immediate aftermath, with Dr. King on his back and his colleagues pointing in the direction of the assassin's gunshot.

Milwaukee Brewers outfielder Ryan Braun can barely be seen (another Brewer has his hand on Braun's helmet) as his teammates mob him at homeplate after he hit his game-winning homerun against the St. Louis Cardinals at Miller Park Tuesday. The Brewers won the game 5-4. Brewers player Christian Yelich set the stage for Braun by hitting a game tying solo homer before Braun's at bat. The win brought the Brewers' early season record to 4-1. The Cardinals are 2-3. —Photo by Yvonne Kemp

Milwaukee County Judge Rebecca Dallet wins state supreme court seat, Felesia Martin to replace retiring county supervisor Micheal Mayo

Compiled by MCJ Editorial Staff

Milwaukee County Circuit Court Judge Rebecca Dallet will now be known as Wisconsin State Supreme Court Justice Rebecca Dallet, and Felesia Martin will replace retiring District 7 Milwaukee County Board Supervisor Michael Mayo.

Both candidates were among a group of area challengers and incumbents to win their respective elections during Tuesday's local and state-wide spring general elections.

Wisconsin voters spoke loud and clear in wanting to keep in place the 170-year-old state treasurer's office. Wisconsinites gave an overwhelming "NO" to a constitutional amendment that would have eliminated the office. The amendment was defeated by a surprisingly wide margin, 61% to 39%.

With the retention of the office, there will be an election for the position in the fall.

Dallet received 555,786 votes (56%) to Sauk County Judge Michael Screnock's 440,566 votes (44%).

Dallet's win loosens the stranglehold conservative state justices had on the court. Conservatives now have a 4-3 majority. Dallet will replace conservative Justice Michael Gableman, who did not seek re-election. She will serve a 10-year term.

An employee with the Medical College of Wisconsin and a community activist, Martin defeated social services employee Kenneth Ginlack, Sr. She received 2,851 votes (79%) to Ginlack's 776 (21%) votes.

Darienne Driver to resign as MPS superintendent

Compiled by MCJ Editorial Staff

Milwaukee Public Schools Superintendent Dr. Darienne Driver is stepping down from her position on July 6 to become president and CEO of the United Way of Southeastern Michigan.

"This is a once-in-a lifetime opportunity to use the power of collective impact and equity to improve the lives of young people, their families and the communities in which they live," Driver said in letter to parents and teachers.

Driver came to Milwaukee in 2012. She was the district's first Chief Innovation Officer.

Driver assumed the superintendent position after Gregory Thornton left to become school superintendent in Baltimore.

Driver is the youngest person to serve as superintendent of the largest school district in Wisconsin. She's also the only woman to do so on a permanent basis.

Driver has been involved with the United Way of Greater Milwaukee and Waukesha County for the past four years.

She was a member of the board of directors and chaired the volunteer engagement committee and served as the Season of Caring Champion for

Volunteer Engagement in the Campaign Cabinet.

Driver will be returning to Detroit, where she began her professional career as a teacher.

In a statement Tuesday, MPS Board President Mark Sain said Driver's efforts at the helm of the district has advanced it to a better place as it continues to move forward to improve outcomes for all young people.

"Dr. Driver is a professional who

Anti-apartheid activist Winnie Madikizela-Mandela dies at 81

By Christopher Torchia, courtesy of the Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG — Winnie Madikizela-Mandela, a longtime anti-apartheid activist whose reputation was sullied by scandal, has died. She was 81.

The woman many South Africans once described as the "Mother of the Nation" and a champion of the Black majority, died "surrounded by her family and loved ones," according to a statement released by the Madikizela-Mandela's family.

Madikizela-Mandela was the second of Nelson Mandela's three wives, married to him from 1958 to 1996.

Mandela, who died in 2013, was imprisoned throughout most of their marriage, and Madikizela-Mandela's own activism against White minority rule led to her being jailed for months and placed under house arrest for years.

"She kept the memory of her imprisoned husband Nelson Mandela alive during his years on Robben Island (prison) and helped give the struggle for justice in South Africa one of its most recognizable faces," the family said.

However, Madikizela-Mandela's political activism was marred by her conviction in 1991 for kidnapping and assault, for which she was fined. She faced these allegations again during the 1997 hearings before the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, a panel that investigated apartheid-era crimes.

As a parliamentarian after South Africa's first all-race elections, she was convicted of fraud.

Still, Madikizela-Mandela remained a venerated figure in the ruling African National Congress, which has led South Africa since the end of apartheid in 1994.

She continued to tell the party "exactly what is wrong and what is right at any time," said senior ANC leader Gwede Mantashe.

The ANC, which was the main movement against apartheid, had lost popularity in recent years in part because of scandals linked to former President Jacob Zuma, who resigned in February.

Nobel laureate and former archbishop Desmond Tutu, a periodic critic of the ruling party, noted her

Your Two-Year-Old's Brain at A Glance

Many people imagine that brain development only involves the brain getting larger. While the brain does get somewhat bigger in the first two years of life, the more dramatic changes don't involve growth in physical size but in functionality.

Neuroplasticity, or the brain's capacity to change and adapt, is incredibly high in infancy. As a result, a baby's brain learns new ways to work and function. (Natalie Boyd, Study.com)

Two parts of the brain that develop and become better and better at their jobs are the sensory cortex and the motor cortex. These two areas of the brain are in charge of how we interact with the world around us. Think of them kind of like a telephone. The sensory cortex is in charge of figuring out the world through sensory input. It's like the earpiece of a telephone. Information is coming in and is processed in the sensory cortex.

Here are a few activities you can do to engage in with your child:

- Motor Games and Activities
- Blow bubbles to fall down in front of child while standing. Encourage him to pop bubbles by clapping between hands or by poking with his finger.
 - Grab a toy that your toddler can sit on top of as you bring her around your house or on the sidewalk. Your toddler has to stay on by holding a handle and using her legs.
 - You can set up a mini obstacle course in your living room. Make pillow stacks to crawl over or lay a blanket over a table to make you toddler crawl under it.
 - Give your toddler their own drawer or box of "treasures." These can be new toys from the dollar section or objects he would find interesting. Let them look through it and whatever they pull out you can use to play with.
 - Create a new living space underneath a dining room table. Add in some pillows and his favorite toys to make it like their own house.
 - Chase your toddler around the room saying, "I'm going to get you!" Let the anticipation of catching her - build until you eventually catch them.

- Set up empty water bottles to make bowling pins. Show your toddler how to roll the ball to knock down the pins.

- Sensory Games and Activities
- Did you know kids can play in the house or in your backyard to get your little one outside?
 - Balloons are fun when they're inflated and decorate a room, but they're even more fun when you let them fly around the room. Instead of tying the end of the balloon, let it go and see it whoosh around the room. Let your toddler get it and bring it back.
 - Tape some contact paper (sticky side out) to your wall or window. Give your toddler a few different objects like cotton balls that she can use to throw or place onto the contact paper and watch it stick.
 - Make a little slit in a box to make it your toddler's personal mailbox. Then put in junk mail that you get and let him tear it open.
 - Get a small water bottle and fill it with different objects. Let your toddler shake it around and discover glitter, pebbles and other objects as she turns it in her hand. Make sure the bottle is securely sealed and filled with age appropriate items.
 - Create a ramp. Let your toddler roll different objects down it to learn about how gravity works.
 - Get some brightly colored objects, like bouncy balls, and place them around the living room. Then let your toddler walk around and try to find them. Don't make them too hard to find though. Your toddler can count them out as she finds them too.
 - Get outside and put different sized balls on the ground. Set down a hula hoop and have your toddler gather the balls and put them inside the hoop.
 - Play chef and use measuring cups for your toddler to fill with cheerios. Then let him serve you the cheerios as a snack. He won't understand the different measurements yet but scooping and dumping will be fun for him.
- Communication Games and Activities
- Find a large cardboard box that baby can play in. Place baby in the box and pretend she is in a race car.

Alderman Coggs launches 10th Annual Freedom Essay Scholarship Contest

Alderman Milele A. Coggs is challenging recent Milwaukee high school graduates to dissect the concept of "freedom" for the 10th Annual Freedom Essay Scholarship Contest. The scholarship is open to current and recent high school graduates from Milwaukee who are college-bound.

The topic for the essay is "freedom," and it provides graduates with an opportunity to parse out how they define the subject and what it means to them. They are encouraged to share their ideas to end prejudice, oppression, discrimination, sexism and violence, on a global scale. The suggested length of an applicant's essay is 1,000 words.

Applications are being accepted now and must be post-marked by Tuesday, August 7, 2018. Two $500 scholarships will be awarded and winning essays may be published, according to Alderman Coggs. Alderman Coggs says one cannot talk about progress and change without talking about the new generation of inspiring young leaders.

"The scholarship contest provides young people an opportunity to reflect on the lessons of history and use those lessons to help shape their future, not only for themselves but also for their community, for Milwaukee and possibly beyond," she said.

Paper applications will also be available at city libraries, many high schools and colleges, and the following are drop-off locations:

- WestCare Wisconsin, Inc. Harambee Community Center, 335 W. Wright St.
 - Northcott Neighborhood House, 2460 N. 6th St.
 - Wisconsin Black Historical Society Museum, 2620 W. Center St.
 - Martin Luther King Library, 310 W. Locust St.
- The contest is open to students who reside in the City of Milwaukee and attended a public, private, parochial or home school, or who participated in a high school correspondence program in the city. Preference will be given to residents of the 6th Aldermanic District. Entries can be submitted online or by a downloadable paper application, both found at milwaukee.gov/district6/FSEC. Additional contest rules, complete details and submission requirements are contained within the application. For more information, please contact Akuwa Dantzler at adantz@milwaukee.gov or at (414) 286-2994.

An open letter by award winning high school student seeking help to attend national oral interpretation, literature, prose and poetry competition

Hello, my name is Ayanna Martin. I am 17 years old. I am a senior, vocal major at Milwaukee High School of the Arts. I am in two choirs: Advanced/Concert Choir and Show Choir.

I have participated in many choir and solo competitions and many staged shows. Last year, I was the main lead in the musical opera, EUNIA, and The Gospel of Collonus. This year, I starred in Porgy and Bess and in our (R)Evolution Musical, having many lead roles.

I am also a member of the forensics team at my school. I have been in forensics now for all four of my high school years. In those four years, I have been blessed with winning many medals and awards.

A few weeks ago, I competed against 176 other students in the whole Wisconsin area in oral interpretation of literature, prose and poetry, to qualify for the national tournament held in Washington DC, May 25th-may28th, of this year. MPS has had a major budget cut in the past two years and one of those budgets was forensics. I need to raise about $2,000 in order to hold my competition place. I am seeking the help of my community so that I can have the opportunity to compete on the national level and show my great talents.

Public speaking is a passion of mine which is why I take the next step on going to this national tournament and to college as well. I want to major in communications with a special interest in public relations. I have received many scholarships because of forensics as well. I will look forward to finishing forensics in college as well.

If you would like to help in any way by making donations, please call Yolanda Martin (my mom) at 414-595-0590. You may make checks payable to Ayanna Martin. Thank you for your generosity.

*May the Lord bless you and keep you cares deeply about the children of Milwaukee," Sain said. "She has dedicated her professional life to making sure young people are prepared for success after they graduate from high school.

"She has a passion for collective impact as a means to create opportunities and equity for all our students. I wish her the very best."

The outgoing superintendent noted a number of achievements during her tenure as MPS superintendent to improve the lives of the district's students. Among her accomplishments:

- The district moved into a higher performance category on the state report card in 2016.
- Developed a strategic plan known as the Eight Big Ideas and a district-wide problem of practice that focuses on equity and will improve student achievement, strengthen community partnerships and guide resource allocation into the next decade.

- Partnering with the Panasonic Foundation in 2014 and established new procedures for the superintendent's evaluation, conducting instructional rounds in schools and launching the MPS Way - the district's culture and climate framework.

- The four-year graduation rate is steadily increasing and is now at 62.5 percent. There has also been a 10 percent increase in the number of students promoted to 10th grade

- The adoption and implementation of a series of student-centered resolutions that improve safety, promote equity and advocacy.

- Early Literacy scores continue to improve, with four percent gains over the previous year

- The new Office of Black and Latino Male Achievement, including the launching of manhood academies, mentor luncheons and culturally responsive teaching practices.

- College & Career Centers grew from two off-site locations to full centers in 20 high schools. FAFSA (Free Application for Federal Student Aid) increased from 49 percent to 72 percent of graduating seniors completing the application in just three years.

Dr. King's loss felt even more in today's very troubled times

News -- October 23, 1987 -- I speculated as to how Dr. King might have reacted to events plaguing the planet at that time. I conducted many street interviews and came away enlightened. Each felt that as a result of his death, many of our lives had changed.

In the years since, I have been amused at how often other writers have followed my lead when marking the tragic anniversary by trying to imagine Dr. King's role in world affairs were he alive. But to me, privileged to interview Dr. King twice in person, my recollections of this warm, gracious man are equally meaningful.

In the depths of my continuing grief, it's clear that in one sense, Dr. King died of natural causes -- ironically, on the same April 4 date 24 years earlier in Milwaukee, as my mother, Juanita Carter. Natural, that is, for outspoken Black leaders in America and worldwide.

Like Medgar Evers, Malcolm X, Fred Hampton, Huey P. Newton, Steve Biko and others less well-known, Dr. King was killed by the gunfire of assassins -- or the police.

His luck, often tested, finally ran out on that motel balcony in Memphis. And only the most optimistic among us deny that the dream he espoused died with him.

Of course, Dr. King had contended with many death threats and violent acts. He was stabbed in New York by a deranged woman, hit by rocks while leading an open housing march through Chicago's Marquette Park and bullied countless times by racist police.

Like Nelson Mandela, Mumia Abu-Jamal, Rubin "Hurricane" Carter, Jim Brown, Rev. Al Sharpton and others, Dr. King was unjustly jailed countless times in countless cities -- first in the Montgomery, Ala. bus boycott sparked by the late Rosa Parks, whom I was privileged to interview for USA TODAY.

He endured intense, personal, wiretapped scrutiny by the FBI and its unlamented chief, J. Edgar Hoover. And in the midst of the bus boycott, his home was bombed, with he and his family barely escaping unscathed.

Topsy-turvy 1968 was the year that also saw Robert F. Kennedy killed and massive street protests in Chicago during the Democratic National Convention. But Dr. King was special to us, so his death shocked millions. And it remains hard to believe it happened.

So how do we remember this very special man? My best memories are of the times I was able to talk with him -- after a Southern Christian Leadership Conference rally in Milwaukee in 1964, and boosting Carl B. Stokes' mayoral campaign in Cleveland, in 1967.

Still a young reporter, I was awestruck by his unpretentious, friendly and gentle manner. Just as did the late Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan. Dr. King actually called me Mr. Carter during my interviews -- an expression of respect I still cherish.

To his millions of admirers -- those who lived when he lived and those who know of his deeds mainly through television clips -- his wonderful, inspirational spoken

Religious Bookshelf Modern Day Parable Affirms God's Grace is Greater Than Any Storm

Author Natasha Brewer Offers a 21st Century Twist on the Story of Esau and Jacob in Her Soon-to-Release Book, "Biblical Proportions"

WASHINGTON /Christian Newswire/ -- Written more than 3,000 years ago, the Bible is often referenced as the "greatest story ever told." On May 11, author Natasha Brewer will release her biblically-inspired novel, "Biblical Proportions," offering a new twist on one of the Bible's most-often referenced stories.

"Biblical Proportions" explores the lives of Edward and James Shaw, twin brothers and successful executives at Rock Star Records. Facing immense challenges, including infidelity, addiction and betrayal, the brothers stand to lose everything.

But by the grace of God, they learn that the storms that loom are not designed to destroy them, but instead shift them so that they might lead more purpose-filled and faith-driven lives.

The book is inspired by the Bible story of Esau and Jacob, which is often referenced to illustrate the repercussions of choosing earthly desires, and how godless decisions can have a devastating impact on one's future. Brewer's characters are also compelling examples of the havoc that results from sinful behavior, but also the redemption and victory in choosing God even after embarking on the wrong path.

"We're all sinners, we all make mistakes, and we have all faced challenges that in the moment felt like we wouldn't be able to recover from them," said Brewer. "These challenges present an incredible opportunity for growth and to deepen our relationship with God. There's no such thing as a perfect person, but there are perfect opportunities to fully understand the enormity of the grace and favor that God wants to share with us if we would only humble ourselves and ask."

Brewer has faced a number of challenges in her own life, including being the victim of gun violence as a teen and the loss of her mother from cancer.

She uses her own personal testimony to uplift and inspire others. The launch of her new book will provide her with yet another tool to encourage those facing personal peril and seeking light in dark times.

"I think readers will be immediately pulled in by the drama and the excitement that surrounds the story's main characters," said Brewer.

But even beyond that, I hope that the story helps to encourage readers who are facing their own challenges, and inspires them to explore how they might reevaluate their own faith walk.

A sample chapter of "Biblical Proportions" is available for download while the book's official launch is approaching. Visit bit.ly/bpchapter1 to read the explosive preview and to receive notifications when the book is available for sale.

Trinity Security Allies Presents Church Safety Training— Zion, IL, April 7

Zion, IL— Trinity Security Allies is pleased to announce an upcoming church safety and security training hosted by Grace Missionary Church on April 7 in Zion, IL from 9 am – 3 pm.

This event is geared towards church leadership, usher, greeters and children's ministry volunteers along with your elders, deacons and members of your church.

Trinity Security Allies will provide education on why a church safety team is needed and share a biblical approach on how to implement a safety team within your church.

Current trends such as domestic issues, lost child, vandalism and crimes against the church will be covered along with warning signs and commonsense approaches on how to handle situations before they escalate into violence. We will look at liabilities of the church in the event of any kind of incident in your church.

Trinity Security Allies provides this training to churches from 65 members to 6500 members in multiple churches from north Florida down to Naples, FL, Georgia, North Carolina and South Carolina.

Trinity Security Allies is honored to have the opportunity to bring this training to the north Chicago area. Jim Howard brings this information from four different perspectives: 35+ years of law enforcement, executive protection training and current EOT adjunct instructor in Florida, forming and currently running a church safety team for a 3500 + member church and his family being a victim of a church shooting when Jim was a teenager.

"In 1970 when I was 16 years old my father stepped outside a church and killed one of the deacons that was helping my family because of domestic issues we were having," said Jim Howard. Since then, Howard's life has come full circle.

The cost is $15/person. Lunch and snacks will be provided for attendees. Pre – register for this event at www.TrinitySecurityAllies.com and click on the April 7 event.

An Increasingly Unorthodox World

Leaders in the Orthodox Church say the religion may need to adapt to contemporary times to remain relevant.

A season of religious holidays around the world moves into higher gear on Wednesday with the observance of one of the most important saints in the Orthodox Church, a person whose gift-giving legacy is partially tied to the birth of the Santa Claus legend in the U.S. and Father Christmas in the U.K.

But with the arrival of St. Nicholas Day – observed on Dec. 6 in Western Christian nations but on different December days elsewhere – also come questions about the future place Orthodoxy will occupy in the larger Christian world, say analysts.

Orthodox Christians exist in greater numbers today than in the past, yet represent a diminished share of Christians worldwide. Confined primarily to an aging Europe and strongly tethered to tradition, Orthodox Christianity may need to change its ways to remain relevant, say some practitioners.

"People are sending out a signal that they don't identify with structures of the past anymore and look for new forms of spirituality," says the Rev. Cosmin Antonescu from the Saint Andrew Romanian Orthodox Church in Potomac, Maryland.

Around 260 million people in the world today identify themselves as Christian Orthodox, double the number registered a century ago, according to a report from the Pew Research Center, a nonpartisan think tank. Russia alone has more than 100 million followers, while more than 95 percent of people in predominantly Orthodox countries such as Moldova, Georgia, Romania and Greece report keeping icons at home.

Yet, as popular as Orthodoxy is in Eastern Europe, this branch or Christianity seems to be losing ground in the overall Christian population.

Today, Orthodox Christians represent only 4 percent of the world's population. Additionally, Orthodox followers account for 12 percent of Christians worldwide, down 8 percentage points from the levels in 1910, according to the Pew report.

The reasons for this decline are many, and experts say they have to do with history and a more rigid administrative structure of the overall Orthodox community.

After the East-West Schism of 1054 between the Orthodox and Roman Catholic churches, Orthodoxy was left isolated in a declining Byzantine Empire.

As countries broke away from the empire, Orthodoxy developed in a more decentralized way. "All nations identifying themselves as Orthodox have their own independent ruling," Antonescu says.

Though her legacy is incomplete, Dr. Darienne Driver will be remembered for innovative approaches to improving education

We learned a couple of weeks ago that MPS Superintendent Darienne Driver would resign before the end of this school term.

We're sorry to see her go, but it was predictable. The average tenure for a Milwaukee school superintendent is four years. And in most cases, and despite their best intentions, reform initiatives and budgetary manipulations, they leave the district in seemingly the same condition it was in when they started.

Part of the reason for that phenomenon is that the district, board and teachers' union often find themselves in adversarial roles. The superintendent is generally caught in the middle of this tug of war, and the victims are generally the children.

And, as every superintendent since Lee McMurrin announced (indecorously) in 1976 following the "integration" of the Milwaukee Public Schools, good intentions are not enough to close the achievement gap or tear down the walls of educational apartheid, which has plagued most urban communities.

While poverty and familiar dysfunctionality have had an immense impact on public education, it is not, nor can it be, an escape clause. The job of the superintendent is to create a paradigm and process to educate all children. But as Driver and her predecessors learned the hard way, there are no homemade remedies for what ails MPS.

That said, determining Driver's legacy is easier said than done. And if we were to give her a grade, it would be an incomplete. Her legacy will be determined as time goes by, but her initiatives were visionary in many ways."

There is no doubt that she cares about the children, and tried to improve the quality of education. Her handful of initiatives did move the needle a little, as demonstrated by the improved graduation rates. But the truth is that it was under her watch that the district earned the dubious distinction of having the lowest fourth and eighth grade reading proficiency rates in the country.

The gap between White and Black students has remained embarrassingly wide and last week it was learned that a federal agency cited MPS for its disparities in the administration of suspension of Black students.

Obviously, you can't put the total blame for those negative social indicators on Driver's shoulder alone.

But it proves our point that good intentions amid conflict between the board, union, superintendent and the state has ill served our children.

Which raises another question: how will state representatives who enacted laws two years ago that provide for non-MPS entities to take over failing schools react to Driver's resignation?

Architects of that legislation tabled efforts to force the county executive to take over failing schools because they had faith that Driver would turn things around. Now what? And who will be appointed to replace her?

Maybe it's time we considered breaking up MPS into smaller districts. Or, create a paradigm in which the superintendent has greater autonomy. Whoever takes over the reins of MPS should be entrusted with a jack-hammer to tear down the walls of educational apartheid.

Fear of a "Neckbone Invasion!"

I didn't get it.

In fact, it went right over my head (which isn't saying that much since I'm not the tallest tree in the forest).

My ignorance, or naiveté, explains why it took me a couple of times watching the commercial about "survival" food to understand its significance.

The same for the email I received at home about stocking up on ammunition, or the forest survival kit I received a coupon for from the self-defense magazine I subscribe to.

In fact, it didn't fully come together until I was describing to my niece the bomb shelter that was built behind, and under my grandfather's house on 8th Street back in the day.

Suddenly it clicked like the mushroom cloud over Hiroshima: The Chinese, North Koreans or maybe the Mexicans are going to launch a nuclear bomb on the U.S. and those of us who are able to climb out of our shelters must be prepared for survival in the wasteland!

The advertised dehydrated food will be worth its weight in gold, waterproof matches and generators will be at a premium and guns will be needed to protect family and properties.

Or, on a brighter note (pun intended), brown skinned Moslems adorned in black turbans and carrying the Holy Koran and AK 47s are expected to land at Timmerman Field any day now, and soon after touring the new Bucks Arena are going to take the new street car to Waukesha and Washington counties to convert the gentiles and Jews.

Or maybe there's going to be a race war, as some seemingly intelligent Black folks are predicting.

If not an "uncivil" race war, in which frightened or prejudiced white folks

MILLENNIAL MAGIC
By Paishance Welch

Communication is Key

Growing up, my mom always dropped my brothers and I off at school and every afternoon she would pick us up. When getting in the car, we were always prepared to tell her how our day went, what we learned, what we ate for lunch and what class we enjoyed the most. If there was nothing else my mom did, she always made sure to ask what our day was like.

The smallest things, mean the world to children and can eventually mean the world to parents, as the child grows older. A conversation, with a topic as simple as, "What is your favorite color?", can really jumpstart a healthy parent-child relationship. Communication is not only key, it is also healthy.

Communication is healthy. As children grow, their brains change and mature as well. As we have been learning, the most important years of child's life, when it comes to learning and education, is from birth to the age of seven. As children grow, things they are exposed to on a daily basis can be helpful for them.

One of those things is general conversation. General conversation exercises the muscle and brain tissue, forcing their verbal competency to be tested and challenged. If your child can grasp and convey an idea or concept to one person, imagine how they would do the same with a friend, classmate or classroom!

One thing about communication is that it is not always verbal. Children are active, intuitive and energetic creatures. They pay attention to their surroundings and they are extremely intelligent.

Another kind of communication that is healthy for children is when you don't say a word. That's right! Communicate with your child by physically doing things.

Teach them how to be kind by being kind to your neighbor. Communicate in way that is minimum in volume, but massive in outcome. Children are definitely watching everything you do. So be sure to show them what it means to be a well-mannered, loving, and respectful because even if you don't say a word, an action is still language.

We are literally raising our future and if we want the future to be good to us, we must be good to it (children, I mean). We must speak to them in ways that are beneficial to them.

They must grow in an environment where they were able to speak, as well as being spoken to. That environment must be provided by their elders and authoritative figures. Need ideas for better communicating with your child? Try these:

Remembering Dr. Martin Luther King

words provide a legacy for the ages. And that is how most Americans remember Dr. King.

But he gave us more than unsurpassed oratory. Dr. King provided Blacks in America with a genuine hero -- someone we could proudly look up to without reservation. He was humble, albeit educated, accomplished and genuinely respected by the best and brightest.

I've always considered Dr. King's greatest accomplishment the Nobel Peace Prize he won on Oct. 14, 1964 -- largely for his stance against the Vietnam War. This chagrined those who felt he should confine his interests and opinions to racial and domestic affairs.

Upon accepting this most prestigious of all honors in Oslo, Norway, on Dec. 10, 1964, Dr. King, as expected, gave another fine speech. Among those words, what I find most meaningful was the simple phrase: "...I refuse to accept the idea that man is mere flotsam and jetsam in the river of life that surrounds him..."

To me, this is what Dr. King was all about -- a great man able to connect with every man and woman, regardless of station. It's why his tragic, violent death 50 years ago is still so hard for so many of us to live with. The king is dead. Long live the king. —Milwaukee native Richard G. Carter is a freelance writer are going to build barricades around America's central cities, to keep the urban terrorists from invading their communities.

You can imagine what's going to happen when the new Black Panther Party members start climbing those fences.

Bizarre? Maybe (probably). But Something is going on right up under— or over—our noses, and that smell is not bar-be-cue.

When Barack Obama was president, gun sales skyrocketed out of fear that he would rescind the second amendment. At least that's the ridiculous statement promulgated by the NRA and Republicans who sought to rally opposition to the greatest president in U.S. history, who happened to be African American.

For the record, sales have continued to soar under the reign of Emperor Donald Trumpster, and a Republican Congress that doesn't care that the world knows they are being prostituted by the NRA.

Ammunition sales, a brother who works at a sporting goods store told me recently, is at record levels.

And the purchasers are not only whites. Black folks are buying weapons at record rates.

Why? Protection against urban terrorists? Or do they too think the world, at least how we know it, is coming to an end? That Trump's pledge to make America great again implies a return to slavery, or the good old reconstruction days?

Some people believe the emergence of radical White supremacist and a tsunami of racial incidents signals the beginning of a black versus white and bright war.

A member of the Community Journal staff said if there were a war, it would be people of color (exclusive of Asians who either have too many American investments, or are making too much money selling horse hair and nail polish) against White Surpemers.

Most millennials will probably be on the side of the underclass. And liberal Democrats will be at the vanguard (at least until the first bullet flies, and then they will have a meeting to go to).

Another train of thought has it that the privileged young will take on their rich providers. Or rich against the poor.

If you paid heed to the Bernie Sanders phenomena, and the resulting Millennial Social Movement, you'd know of what I speak. The pendulum has swung to the left, and many of today's millennials are undeclared socialists who believe we are all pawns of the 1% who own 80%, and controls 100%.

I don't totally dismiss there is something brewing, but I'm more fearful of an atomic war than an uncivil one. Or maybe it's the other way around.

I can't totally disregard the possibility of racially motivated confrontations that will grip the nation. Racial tensions today are as caustic as I have seen them since the 1960s. The difference today is less tolerance, more guns and a greater willingness to act in ways that Martin Luther King, Jr., would not have approved of.

America is witnessing a cultural change that is eating away at our country like a cancer. The epidemic of police murders of unarmed Black men and the terrorism that has gripped our schools and public venues is but the tip of the iceberg.

White Supremacists and other nuts have been emboldened by the election of the Trumpster, and racists and radicals are seemingly coming out of the cracks like roaches.

Milwaukee has not been immune. We've witnessed several incidents over the last couple of years that have fueled tensions on both sides. And I'm not just speaking of the killings of several Black men by police in Brewtown, Wauwatosa and Madison.

There have been incidents in state colleges and high schools. Just recently, white students at a Southside school accosted a Racine high school visiting basketball team of innocent Black scholar athletes.

I've also received several reports of racial incidents in Jefferson, Fond du

URBAN MY DIALOGUE

By Torre "ToeJoe" Johnson

Yes, We do love the north division high school building. It is the only public high school built in the inner city from ground up in my life time. What we do not like is that when a prominent educator stands up and says "Let me have a shot at helping this high school," and the children that attend it get negative backlash.

Dr. Howard Fuller was not only an alumni, he was once the superintendent of the Milwaukee Public Schools, and if some would have listened to his suggestions, then our schools would definitely be in a better place.

I am asking the parents of all low performing schools to step up and speak out. Demand better for your child. The only option cannot be to just close the school or to always allow others to come take over, to show us how it needs to be done.

I hope someone can prove this wrong, but they told me that North Division is the second lowest performing High School in the nation. Wow! If that's true or if it's failing at any level of measurement there should be a great concern.

Then we will parade our child and some facility members out in protest, saying leave our school alone, but are they also referring to just the building, the students, the curriculum the staff or all of the above?

I know that after sitting in a few meetings, only the building has a chance of still standing.

Then there's this echo that even one or two other successful charters are eyeing this land mark school, a school that has developed some Milwaukee greats, Dr. Howard Fuller being one. I am going to have to say it, only we can save us. So I am asking Dr. Fuller and Milwaukee Collegiate Academy to submit and let's fight to be allowed to educate or own. Black families, stand up our future depends on your support.

Lac and Sheboygan counties.

But you don't have to go that far.

I held my temper when I was confronted recently in Washington County, and my sister mentioned two incidents in Grafton. One of my grandsons was victimized by police profiling in Wauwatosa last month. Fortunately, he was armed with my "Young African American men" survival tools and lived to see another day.

And then there was the image of the White guy at a Jackson shooting range who looked at my son as if he was wearing an orange prison outfit before declaring that he was sighting in his AR-15 type rifle for "all" the "terrorists." The implication, and the look on his face, is permanently imprinted on my mind.

Actually, as I explained many years ago, I can partly understand the fear and anxiety of some White folks.

If I were White, living in the suburbs and conditioned by television and social media, I too would be fearful of Black folks—at least those who subscribe to or were otherwise inducted into the American Poverty Culture.

In the last two weeks there have been three highly publicized incidents of Black stupidity that probably fueled negative stereotypes in many white (and Black) suburbanites.

The televised Wendy's and Walmart melees did nothing to correct prejudicial assumptions about the volatility of Black teens. And then there was a melee at a buffet food eatery in the suburbs. That probably forever scared away White customers.

There's a reason why there are no movie theaters, national chain buffet restaurants or major department stores in the central city.

And in case you haven't figured it out, there's an obvious reason why many Black folks travel to Walmart in the suburbs instead of several stores in our own neighborhoods.

Many Whites, or should I say, middle class of all hues, are fearful of a "Neckbone invasion".

Those fears prompted a suburban state representative to threaten to cut off state aid to Milwaukee if our mayor could not stop Black thugs from committing crimes in her community. She also implied constituents were arming themselves and hiding out in "shelters".

You can dismiss this if you wish. But every week my church family prays for peace in the streets, an end to racism (including police misconduct), and that the next school shooter is not Black. (We also hold our breath every time there's a killing in Milwaukee, although we know nine times out of ten, it's a Black victim, killed by a Black terrorist.)

We also pray for restraint when any one of us encounters a situation precipitated by racists in blue, white (hood) or khaki.

But, ironically, we could probably divorce ourselves from those prayers (at least for a while), if the fears of those who are purchasing all of those survival packs come to fruition.

If ISIS invades our homeland, or the Russians, Chinese or North Koreans call 45IQ's bluff and attack, I can guarantee there will be unity and solidarity in America.

And if America—or at least Wisconsin—survives, there are probably going to be zombies and cannibals to contend with to distract us from racial conflicts.

Actually, that would be an alternate ending for my screenplay:

We're attacked on the 50th anniversary of Dr. King's assassination, but instead of riots, all the races band together to fight off the common foe, sharing dehydrated food and bullets.

Shem Hotep.

Anti-apartheid activist Winnie Madikizela-Mandela dies at 81

passing by describing Madikizela-Mandela as "a defining symbol" of the fight against apartheid.

"She refused to be bowed by the imprisonment of her husband, the perpetual harassment of her family by security forces, detentions, banings and banishment," Tutu said. "Her courageous defiance was deeply inspirational to me, and to generations of activists."

Madikizela-Mandela had been in and out of hospital since the start of the year, according to her family. She had back surgery a year ago.

After hearing of her death, some people gathered Monday evening outside Madikizela-Mandela's home in the Soweto area of Johannesburg to sing tributes. She had attended Easter services in Soweto over the long weekend.

The family said it will release details of her memorial and funeral services when they are finalized.

Madikizela-Mandela's story was told in biographies and novels as well the Hollywood movie "Winnie," starring Oscar-winning actress and singer Jennifer Hudson.

The young Winnie grew up in what is now Eastern Cape province and came to Johannesburg as the city's first Black female social worker.

Her research into the high infant mortality rate in a Black township, which she linked to poverty caused by racism, first sparked her interest in politics.

In 1957, she met Nelson Mandela, an up-and-coming lawyer and anti-apartheid activist 18 years her senior, and they married a year later.

The first five turbulent years of their marriage saw Mandela going underground to build the armed struggle against apartheid, and finally to prison in 1963, while his wife gave birth to two daughters.

Madikizela-Mandela always was aware of the danger of being in the shadow of her husband's all-encompassing personality.

Even before they were separated by Nelson Mandela's long stay in prison, she had become politicized, being jailed for two weeks while pregnant for participating in a women's protest of apartheid restrictions on Blacks.

The apartheid police later harassed her, sometimes dragging her from bed at night without giving her a chance to make arrangements for her daughters.

In 1977, she was banished to a remote town, Brandfort, where neighbors were forbidden to speak to her. She was banned from meeting with more than one person at a time.

The woman who returned to Johannesburg in 1985 was much harder, more ruthless and bellicose, branded by the cruelty of apartheid and determined vengeance.

In her book "100 Years of Struggle: Mandela's ANC," Heidi Holland suggested that Madikizela-Mandela was "perhaps driven half-mad by security police harassment." In an infamous 1986 speech she threatened "no more peaceful protests."

Instead, she endorsed the "neck-lacing" method of killing suspected informers and police with fuel-doused tires put around the neck and set alight.

"Together hand-in-hand, with our boxes of matches and our necklaces, we shall liberate this country," she said.

Madikizela-Mandela complained bitterly on a North American tour after she was forced to testify to South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission in 1997 that the commission never asked her about the treatment she suffered over 18 months in solitary confinement.

The Mandela marriage that survived decades of prison bars dissolved with a formal separation in 1992, two years after Nelson Mandela was released.

The couple divorced in 1996, two years after Mandela became president in South Africa's first all-race elections, with Mandela accusing his wife of infidelity.

As the mother of two of Mandela's children, Madikizela-Mandela and her ex-husband appeared to rebuild a friendship in his final years.

After Mandela's death, however, she became involved in disputes over his inheritance.

Election Watch 2018

Incumbent and County Board Chairman Theodore Lipscomb, Sr. squeezed out a tight victory over challenger Casey Shorts. Lipscomb received 5,703 (52%) to Shorts' 5,163 (48%) votes.

Two other Black candidates had mixed results in their pursuit of public office. Sparkle Ashley lost her bid to unseat incumbent district 18 Milwaukee County Supervisor Deanna Alexander. The sitting supervisor received 2,451 (57%) votes to Ashley's 1,864 (43%) votes.

Black children's advocate and political newcomer Wanda Montgomery will become one of two trustees on the Brown Deer Village Board of Trustees. She garnered the most votes of the three candidates with 1,654 votes (42%).

Almost Ready!

MCJ photographer Bill Tennesen took this photo of the new Bucks Arena as it begins to round the last turn towards completion! He was part of the press corp that took the most recent tour of the aren. The new scoreboard was hoisted in place about a day after the photo was taken. Bucks and NBA great Kareem Abdul-Jabbar toured the new facility, giving it a thumbs up.

While the Orthodox and the Catholic churches share many rituals and religious beliefs, experts say Orthodoxy seems to have done a better job at keeping its original traditions. When Catholics tried adapting the church to respond to new social needs, the Orthodox Christians focused on preserving their customs.

"We were the most constant church in Christianity, but failing to respond to people's ever-changing needs made us lose ground in society," Antonescu says.

Today, Orthodoxy remains concentrated in Europe, where 77 percent of Orthodox Christians still live, while Roman Catholicism expanded around the world.

"In the beginning we were the Byzantine Empire," Antonescu says. "Catholicism, the Western culture expanded in the world and brought Christianity to many places, while, after the rise of Islam, the Byzantine Empire focused on mainly defending against Islamic attacks until the fall of Constantinople. We weren't given the same space as the Catholics were."

Catholics have also arguably benefited from a stronger public presence by being represented by a singular leader, the pope, who has often been a well-known contemporary figure.

"Pope John Paul I became a significant global figure in his relatively short time; John Paul II was clearly a very visible figure globally, as well as Pope Francis is today," says the Rev. Leonid Kishkovsky of the Church of Our Lady of Kazan, a Russian Orthodox Church in Sea Cliff, New York.

"This all stems from the specifics of the Catholic Church with a figure in the bishop of Rome. This focus is very real and has been there all along but in the age of media popularity it has become very effective."

According to the Pew report, a decline in Orthodoxy might also stem from declining demographic trends, with a lower fertility rate in Europe, where populations are growing older.

"Europe's population has long been shrinking as a share of the world's total population, and, in coming decades, it is projected to decline in absolute numbers as well," the report shows.

In order to preserve not only its traditions but also its existence, experts say the Orthodox Church will need to look beyond Europe. That will be a challenging task, since the Orthodox Church is competing with more active religions that seem to be able to expand faster.

"Christianity is growing primarily in Africa and Asia and the Orthodox are not strong enough in those parts of the world to keep up with the demographic challenge of growth," Kishkovsky says. "There is also a huge growth of Christians in China for instance.

But the Chinese social and political situation is such that the primary growth — millions of adherents to Christianity — comes to the Protestants because their missions can be very informal and they move quickly among parts of the populations."

Whether Orthodox traditions will stand the test of time is unknown. Priests say it's not uncommon for religions to transform and mold into something new, a development that shouldn't worry Orthodox followers.

"Theology evolves as well as the process of knowing God," Antonescu says. "Some spiritualities never die but turn into something else that respond to the same human needs but maybe in a different way."
